Allende, Isabel. Paula: A Memoir. Translated by Margaret Sayers Perden, Harper Perennial, 2008.

Notice how the second line of the citation uses a .5" hanging indent from the left margin. Not all citations will have a second line. Follow the citation with a blank line space (press enter twice) and then press the "tab" key once to add an additional .5" hanging indent from the last line of the citation. If your citation is only one line long, you will need to press the "tab" key twice to making this portion 1" from the margin. Here is an example of an annotation: Allende tells the story of the death of her 28-year old daughter, Paula Frias, from porphyria, a rare genetic disease. With the purported intention of documenting family history for her daughter so she will not forget them, Allende recalls her ancestors with gossipy detail, but there are few details of her daughter's life: a school project, a few outfits. Paula's Spartan lifestyle and saintly desire to help the poor and elderly is in contrast to her mother's fanciful accounts of love affairs, the jobs which prepared her to become a writer, the death of Pablo Neruda and the overthrow of the Allende government. Allende's innovative approach to memoir explores familial relationships, mourning, and the history that has shaped her life.
