Subject line: I started blaming myself for my failure...BUT THEN...

I was a young copywriter.

I have just started my journey with writing ads via email.

I had huge hopes that It is destined that I will become successful,
And I will never have to work in a 9-5 ever again.

But I reacht what could only be described as an impenetrable roadblock.
I couldn't find any prospect to work with.

I tried to take many courses,
But none of them explained exactly step by step where I could make mistakes.

I began to lose hope, thinking negatively about my career.
Questioning whether I have the skills.

But I knew That I had a choice to make,
Either I gave up on my dreams and live the rest of my life thinking about what could I achieve,
Or work even harder, and give copywriting a last chance,
Commit to my last stand,
All or nothing.

Fast forward to ten months later, and I'm making 50k a MONTH,
And I'm living the dream life I always wanted, not caring about paying bills ever again.

I made the right decision, and If you are brave enough to take the first step,
