Credit for Embedded Internships (July 2019)

Wellesley students enrolled in pre-approved study abroad programs may earn credit toward the degree for the following:

1. Internships that require the student to communicate primarily in a foreign language may transfer back for academic language credit toward the degree, provided that the experience is transcribed by the study abroad program, has a minimum number of approximately 120 hours for a full unit of credit (and somewhat less for 0.8 units) and requires the students to submit a substantial final project graded by a faculty member of the study abroad program.
2. Internships that are part of other academic courses may be transferred as academic credit towards the degree provided that:
 - a. the student spends at least 8 hours per week doing the internship
 - b. there are regular contact hours with the supervising faculty, with appropriate readings and assignments
 - c. assessment is done by the supervising faculty member of the study abroad program.
3. Students who pursue a research-based internship under the supervision of and graded by a local faculty member of the study abroad program may transfer credit provided that the experience is transcribed by the study abroad program and that the student:
 - a. Submit evidence of the research undertaken in the form of a substantial final product, such as a paper or report, and
 - b. A report from the local supervising faculty member of the study abroad program evaluating the internship and its final product.

Should a student wish to apply credit earned for an internship toward major, minor, distribution or 300-level requirements, then the student must apply to the department head or designated transfer credit approver in the relevant academic department using the Transfer Credit Request form in MyWellesley.
