

Dear Diary,

Hello my name is Spartacus and I am a hunter of treasure and riches in tombs and other caves and unknown places. I have lots of interesting artifacts and cool keepsakes that I have found during my hunts. I love to explore and discover new things. Although, the thing that I am going to tell you about is nether special nor beautiful, I love it so much. So here we go.

That day I was going through a tomb that is of a person that is unknown. All we knew was that our miners had uncovered it while working. I went and explored it to see if there was anything interesting to inspect and see if the dig was worthwhile. When I went in to the cave there was a mummified person with two hand axes across their heart. One of them was appeared to be solid gold, and silver, with a platinum axe head/blade. The other was what appeared to have a bamboo shaft with a rock as the head and all binded together with what looked like willow reeds. I remember thinking to myself that why would a axe so primitive and not very pretty like the other one be in a person of great powers tomb? But yet it was.

Honestly I do not know what or where this interesting axe came from. But I think that it was a tomahawk from Native American royalty possibly around the years of 6000 BC. it is in that style and is obviously a very treasured item and worth lots to them. I love it and will always use it. (by the way it can chop an apple very, very well.)I hope that you will find something that you love as much as I love this interesting, wonderful, axe.

Sincerely,
Spartacus
