Did you know that 50% of the male characters in Genshin Impact are actually catboys? (I can't be bothered to name them because it's 12:45 AM, but the statistics are still correct.) How do I know this? Everything that comes out of my mouth is automatically correct. With this percentage in mind, Scaramouche is a catboy because he's short, he constantly wears his hat, and because I said so.

As we all know, Scaramouche is very short. He may even be one of the shortest characters in the game. Do you know what other character is short? That's right, Draff. Draff is a character (dilf) that you meet in Springvale early in the game. A trait that separates him from the other characters in the game is that he cat ears. This leads me to believe that being a catboy stunts your growth. You can also see this with Olaf and Diona. (Yes, I am aware that she has the child model. Shut your mouth.)

In all of the scenes that Scaramouche is featured in (Not a lot, by the way. Mihoyo please give us more Scaramouche crumbs I am literally begging on my fucking knees.), he never seems to take off his hat. Why's that? I believe it's because he's trying to hide something from other people, more specifically cat ears.

Another reason why I believe that Scaramouche is a catboy is because I said so. Like I said earlier, everything that comes out of my mouth is automatically correct. With that fact in mind, that means that Scaramouche is actually a catboy.

You may be thinking, "Kidney, you are so right but why doesn't Scaramouche have a tail if he's actually a catboy?" Who said he doesn't have a tail? Plus, why the fuck are you staring at his ass you weirdo? You're literally dogwater, dollar tree headset, boxed like a fish, freer than a public bathroom.

At the end of the day, Scaramouche is just a character that has only three to four minutes of screentime. Does that stop me from forcing my catboy agenda on him? No, of course not. Scaramouche is a catboy because he's short, he never takes off his hat, and because I said so.