

Qin Xi Huang

This last couple of months we studied the person who united China, Qin Xi Huang. He was born in 259 BCE and became the emperor in 221 BCE February 18, but then died in 210 BCE when he was 49 because he ate something that had poison in it that killed him. Although he was a horrible person but he also did good stuff. Some good things he did like building the great wall of China and he united China. He did make a lot of horrible decisions. Some of them are that he burned many books and killed so many people. I think that it's a really hard decision to make because he made of done some good things but but he did more bad than good. I mostly think that he was a villain but a little of me thinks that he was a little bit of good.

I was thinking about why we should study him and I thought about it. The reason it matters is because there are many people that come from China and that we know about the history of them. I feel like he shouldn't of burned books (even though I don't like reading) But it was a way of education and something to do. And he shouldn't of killed people or have done anything bad but no one could of changed that because they probably of gotten killed or put in a jail cell type of thing.

I think that Qin Xi Huang was more of a villain than a hero because he did many bad things. One of the things was that he killed confucius people , and also imprisoned a killed many smart people because they would prove Qin Xi Huang wrong and make everyone go against him. That was the serious one but the not so serious one is that he burned books so people would only study a couple of subjects. One of these was magic, culture, and medicine. And I don't think that is good even though there was medicine because what if people wanted to learn about something else.

The reason I pick that he was more of a villain was because he did so many bad things that we don't know about. We only know about some stuff but not all. But, he did build the great wall of china. The reason he built it was to defend off the northern invaders, but as they were building it many and many people died around one million people died and they called it the longest cemetery on earth.

I've learned that hero means to be a good person who helps people out. I also think that if you are a good person you would be there for people and help the planet out, but the way that were talking about is by not killing people and not being rude to so many people, or to friend, or family member. I've also learned that being a villain is people that do a lot of bad things, like killing people, robbing banks, stealing, and just doing bad stuff in general. But Qin did a lot of bad things some of them weren't as bad as others but somewhere just horrible.

In the end I feel like I learned that Qin was both. He was so horrible and did so many bad things that have help us today like the great wall of china, But he shouldn't of killed many and many of people 1.5 million.

