

Feedback on Bureau Local's new website pages

We are very happy to have published new pages up on our site for local stories and open resources.

The aim is that these pages showcase our community, celebrate the work that has been done and make it easier to share resources. As such, it makes sense that we would ask our community members what they think.

What works? More importantly, what doesn't? What could we do to improve them?

Local Stories

Link: <https://www.thebureauinvestigates.com/local/local-stories>

Why it was important for us to have this page:

The Bureau Local holds power to account through collaborative, investigative reporting. We partner with our growing network of reporters, technologists and members of the public in order to tell important stories across the UK. This page is to help you find the local investigations that came out of our collaborative projects.

Your feedback:

Open Resources

Link: <https://www.thebureauinvestigates.com/local/open-resources>

Why it was important for us to have this page:

Bureau Local is committed to transparency. We ask it of organisation we investigate, and of ourselves as well. On this page, you will find the workings behind our investigations and guides for taking our stories further. We hope this makes the investigative process accessible to local reporters as well as the public.

Your feedback:

Good to store your open data maybe on the London Datastore? Better would be the UK Govt's datastore but London is a start. Consider it a curated list of open data.