

What is a token standard?

A token standard is a set of rules or guidelines that define how a particular type of token should behave on a blockchain. It ensures interoperability and consistency, allowing different tokens to work seamlessly within the same ecosystem. Examples include ERC-20 and ERC-721 standards on the Ethereum blockchain.