

Summary: Every saturday at Neilson Hays Library, Bangkok there is a storytelling session for kids. I volunteered for a few saturdays and read stories to kids.

Reflection: It was actually very nerve-wracking than you think because it is very hard to engage kids. I think I did a good job because I heard a lot of laughter and I could see that the kids were enjoying themselves.

Learning outcome	Achieved	Evidence
Increased awareness of strengths and areas for growth	x	I asked the coordinator about my performance and she said that I just needed to work on not rushing too fast with the stories because I was reading too fast and this might cause the kids to not understand the story.
Undertaking new challenges	x	Although I have participated in many public speaking activities but I have never read stories to kids especially a large amount of kids and their parents.
Planned and initiated activities	x	I planned which storybooks I could read for the storytelling and I planned how to do the storytelling; I tried to incorporate some actions with words such as run and clap so that it was more entertaining for the kids
Working collaboratively with others	x	I worked with the co-ordinator (Sam) to choose the stories that I could read to the kids
Showing perseverance and commitment	x	I showed up before time to prepare for the activity and I kept reading and trying to engage the kids through even though I was very afraid that the kids were getting bored

Engaged with issues of global importance
Consideration of ethical implications
Developing new skills	x	• I developed the skills of engaging people and persuading them into listening to me
