Bruce Brotherton

Dear Web Production Supervisor,

Per an employee's recommendation, I am writing to hopefully express facets of myself that my Resume simply cannot highlight. That I have a passion for web design. I have been teaching myself what I can since I was in high school. HTML was such a wonderful coding language to me, being able to change the size and shape of an image with a few attributes was amazing. With the current advancement of HTML5, CSS3, and Javascript the future of web design is amazing.

I cannot give you a degree that will say I have taken classes on web design. I have, however, taken a semester in the Web Development program in college, and excelled in each course I have undertaken. I was even a tutor for some classes and always endeavored to help my fellow classmates.

I have a good grasp of HTML5, CSS, and graphic design, I know how to use Adobe Photoshop very well. I am currently going through a Javascript book in my free time. As Napoleon Hill wrote in Think and Grow Rich

"...any person who has the ambition to give up a part of his spare time to studying at home has in him those qualities which make for leadership."

If given the chance I would fully dedicate myself to growing and becoming better in website coding and design. I know that with the opportunity to fully invest myself in this career I would be able to become a great designer, valuable to any team.

Sincerely,

Bruce Brotherton
