

Pepperidge, Tennessee

Name: Greer Hamilton

Age: 32

Birthday: March 4, 1992

Appearance: Wavy, dark blonde hair, big smile, high cheekbones

Name of face claim: Erin Heatherton

Occupation / Job Description: Day Care Teacher, works nights at Coopers Bistro

Likes: Meditation, children, New York, dogs

Dislikes: mean people, drunks, slobs

Hobbies: Teaching children, dancing

Positive Traits: compassionate, loyal, friendly

Neutral Traits: Outgoing

Negative Traits: selfish, stubborn

Ambitions: Greer strives to be married and has the family she has always wanted before she hits 30.

Background: Greer Hamilton was born and raised in what could only be called a mansion in Long Island, New York, except that all the houses around them were the same size so it wasn't a mansion so much as a typical Long Island home. Her mother, Alicia, today, is a pretty well-known cosmetic surgeon in Manhattan. Back then she was, is, a socialite. She comes from old money, and only went to school and tried to better herself because she doesn't believe in having things handed to her on a silver platter. This is ironic since Erin's favorite dish is the "gold platter". She doesn't like to do much for herself.

Just before Greer was born, Alicia was a medical student when she met Greer's father, who, at the present time, is a well-known lawyer. Her father was quite a few years older than Alicia. He was also very wealthy in his own right. The two dated secretly for a while, months, really, when he ended up getting her pregnant.

They hid the whole pregnancy from everyone because he already had a wife and another daughter in Manhattan. He decided to break it off with the wife and told her he would take care of his other daughter, financially; but he chose Alicia to be with, at least for that moment. So, to make up for his indiscretion and to keep it quiet, he paid for his other daughter's schooling and sent a check every month for eighteen years to her. Greer had her father all to herself for the first 16 years of her life.

Within six months of her father's divorce from his ex, he and Alicia married, thus giving Greer a real home life, in Long Island, by which she means two parents, a white picket fence type of home. Her father was protective of Greer and her mother right from the start, falling right into the father role despite leaving his other daughter behind.

Being that her mom worked long hours and her father was a busy dad, Greer was a wild child. Before she turned 13, she was sneaking out, dating older boys, and hiding things from her parents. When she was just 16 she was out at a party in the city when she accidentally ran into her sister and only realized who she was because she looked a lot like Greer herself. Ironically enough the girls for along great and became friends before realizing they were related. To this day their father had no idea just how close his daughters are.

When Greer was 18 her father took off. Eight years later and she still didn't know where he ended up. Her sister says she has no idea but she isn't sure whether that's true or not. It was her sister that made Greer make the decision to move to Pepperidge. With the money her father puts in a bank account for her, she brought herself a condo in the small town and began looking in the one place she thought her father would be. She had clues about where he might be, and she ran with it.

She secured herself a job at a daycare center because although she may seem selfish, Greer has always loved kids. No one knows where she works other than Ava and Breelin. This brings us to her best friends. A few years after moving to the town and getting that job at the daycare center she became friends with Breelin and Ava. Today, years later they are best friends, ride or die.

The trouble was that she hadn't found the right man yet, and she was now closing in on 30, and still alone, albeit with a striving business. But she had no kids, no husband, no love, only work.

And then she met Matt Harding, a local police officer. They have been seeing each other for 9 months now and things seem to be going smooth for the pair.

Pictures

Timeline

Scenes