Response to the Why People Smile

Smile serves as a expression of happiness, but actually, it also can be a tool to conceal one's negative emotions such as embrassment and intense. So why people control their muscle in the face to show their smile? The reason comes here as nature and nurture.

People gain the ability of communication by smile from our ancient ancestor, and the postnatal social environment reinforces the importance of smile. In fact, the service industry particular stresses the necessity of smile. However, this professional smile doesn't contain much real emotion, inversely, sometimes it can be tough to force a laugh. In this situation, the rate of women's smile frequency shows resonable higher than that of men due to this two aspects. Women are born to smile more and are required to smile more by society.

The society dosen't always have such a high standard about woman's smile. You can have a glance about the reality through the religious painting. The painting describing Saint Mary used to be idle and Saint Mary didn't wear a smile. This situation changed as the occurence of Renaissance, the image of figure became more vivid with the appearance of smile. later, many social movements, Including civil rights movement, gradually the preconceived idea of women's smile formed and solidfied.
