INTRODUCTION

The introduction should be written in 500 to 1000 words. The typeface used is Garamond, 12, with 1.0 pt. space between lines and space between paragraphs (before 0 pt after 6 pt).

The introduction contains, (1) General matters (2) Specific matters and problems that occur (3) Gap Research/gap analysis, including previous studies related to the topic. This is followed by an analysis of the gap or controversy and how the current research will fulfil the research gap. (4) Novelty, contains aspects of the novelty of the research to be conducted and its contribution to the field and related topics. (5) Significance of the research, contains why this research is important to do (6) Specific main objectives to be answered in the research.[1]

LITERATURE REVIEW

The literature review is written in 500 to 2001 words. The literature review should present the general picture within which the focus of the study may fit. For example, how "motivation" may fit into "foreign language education." It also should contain the conceptual definition of the study's main concepts or variables and theoretical support. It is then followed by analyzing previous studies related to the topic discussed in the study.[2]

METHOD

The length of the methodology part is between 500 to 1000 words. Research methods are the strategies, processes, or techniques used to collect data or analyze evidence to uncover new information or better understand a topic. Any modifications to existing methods should also be described. This section should be divided into subsections following the ELOQUENCE Template. Research methods generally consist of, Research design, Population and samples, Instruments, and Procedures.

RESULT AND DISCUSSION

The content of results and discussion reveals the findings of research results based on field data obtained by questionnaires, surveys, documents, interviews, observations and other data collection techniques.

This should explore the significance of the results of the work, not repeat them. A combined Results and Discussion section is often appropriate. Avoid extensive citations and discussion of published literature.

CONCLUSION AND IMPLICATIONS

This can be written as many as 200 to 250 words. This part provides a brief summary of the research aim, findings, and conclusions and implications drawn from it. It also should provide the study's limitations and suggested direction for future research on a related topic. In total, the content of the paper should be the length of 4000 to 6000 words.

DECLARATION OF USING AI IN THE WRITING PROCESS

A paragraph should be included explaining how the author(s) used AI and AI-assisted technologies in the writing process if any.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

It is recommended to use Mendeley. The list of references at the end of the paper should be alphabetically arranged. Two lists should be attached if the researcher used references in Arabic and others in English. If English references are unavailable, the Arabic references should be translated and attached at the end of the paper.[3]

The reference list format is based on the IEEE (Institute of Electrical and Electronics Engineers). A reference list should appear at the article's end and include only literature cited in the manuscripts. References are ordered alphabetically and chronologically. When writing a reference list, please use the following conventions:

https://www.ieee.org/content/dam/ieeeorg/ieee/web/org/conferences/style_references_manual.pdf

The referenced libraries are at least 30, with 80% composition being the primary source and should come from the results of research, ideas, theories, or concepts that have been published in both print and electronic journals. 20% of the references referred to from books are the result of publications in the last five years, except for classical references (parent books), which are used as material for historical studies. The minimum percentage of plagiarism/similarity is no more than 20%.
