

Report #2

Did you know that Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. skipped both the 9th and 11th grades? He was born in Atlanta, Georgia, on January 15, 1927. As a civil rights activist, Dr. King played a crucial role in important events like the Montgomery Bus Boycott and the March on Washington. His mission was to eliminate segregation, discrimination, and racism. Despite the progress made, issues of discrimination still exist today. Many people continue to fight for equal rights, inspiring others to use kindness and unity. Dr. King's legacy remains a powerful symbol of hope and change.

On August 28, 1963, Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. led the historic March on Washington, where over 250,000 people gathered to protest against racism. Racism is the unfair treatment of individuals based on their skin color. During this event, King delivered his iconic “I Have a Dream” speech. In this powerful speech, he expressed his desire for a future free of segregation and discrimination. King wished for a world where equality was a reality, urging people to come together as one. He foresaw black and white individuals joining hands in peace. His commitment to civil rights was unstoppable, and he inspired countless others to take up the cause. King believed that justice and equal rights were fundamental for everyone. If he were alive today, he would undoubtedly continue the fight for equality. He would stand alongside modern activists like Malala Yousafzai and Brittany Packnett Cunningham, advocating for the rights of all people. King's legacy reminds us that the struggle for justice is ongoing. Together, we must carry forward his vision for a more equally accepting world without segregation.

Although segregation today has ended, discrimination continues in various forms. The fight against discrimination continues with the importance of individuals from different backgrounds—be it black or white, Hindu or Muslim, Jewish or Christian. Even when faced with resistance, Dr. King remained determined to persuade others to abandon their prejudices. Small gestures can significantly contribute to appreciating diversity in our communities. Simple actions like holding the door open for someone can give kindness and respect. Additionally, a friendly wave can brighten someone's day, particularly if they are feeling down. Every effort, no matter how small, counts in the struggle against discrimination. It is crucial to lift each other and create an inclusive environment. Together, we can work towards a more accepting and diverse society.

Many people inspire me as a person, but there is one that stands out: Cesar Chavez. The reason he inspires me is because his work is similar to Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.'s efforts in the Civil Rights Movement. Chavez recognized that many farmers were not receiving fair treatment and wages. Instead of ignoring their rights like so many others, he chose to take a stand. He organized strikes and protests to demand better conditions for farm workers. Notably, he went on a hunger strike for 36 days to bring attention to their struggles. His dedication and commitment to justice resounded deeply within me. Chavez also emphasized the importance of nonviolent resistance, showing that peaceful protests can be powerful. His legacy continues to inspire activists around the world today. I admire how he brought people together for a common cause, giving a sense of unity and purpose. In a world where many are quick to look away from injustice, Chavez's courage serves as a reminder to stand up and fight for what is right.

Report #2

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. has made a huge impact on the world by ending segregation through ending the separation of black and white people. With Rosa Parks on his side, King was making progress to the end of discrimination. His mission was so close to completion, if it was not for the fact that he died so young. He led the March on Washington, Montgomery Bus Boycott, and the Birmingham Campaign. Dr. King did many things and worked hard to bring us to a peaceful future. When thinking of the many people that inspire me as a person, they all followed Dr. King's footsteps.