Although I hope in the future they contend with sinners who committed more direct and serious sins, I enjoy that Pentious' main sin was passivity. Evil things happen when good men do nothing, etc etc. Except he didn't just do nothing, he willingly made his living off of building weapons for criminals, so I guess there's that too! But I love him being so wracked with guilt until his death, I think it aligns well with him wanting SO BADLY to go back to Hell. It's not just a matter of missing his friends; he actively does not feel like he belongs in Heaven. Of course, Emily unintentionally furthers this feeling by emphasizing how much he is an oddity in Heaven. And I'm sure he's thinking, "Why do I, of all people, deserve to be the first redeemed sinner?" I really like this internal conflict.

I enjoy the parallel between Sera+The Speaker's song with Lute+Adam. "What will you do tomorrow?" "So, whatcha gonna do about it?" I expect this season is setting up some questions about choices and what penance (heh) actually means.
