SL: The biggest secret that helped me survive the DOWNFALL of my life

Everything can collapse within a second if you don't do something about it.

A decade ago, I had an addiction to eating junk food and chocolate every day as a skinny individual.

An addiction that got out of hand, and I started putting on mass amounts of weight.

Eventually, I fell into depression, and I was struggling to lose weight. I felt as though all hope was lost. I would go out and get stared at and insulted, making me feel VERY insecure.

So I rushed home on that very day, laid back on my couch with my eyes closed, tears binging up, and frustration overwhelming my head. Something compelling clicked as I sat there, diving into deeper, more instructive thoughts.

Conversation from an old friend of mine in which I had a minute flashback once advised me about a website that was diligently offering a product that would help me to lose weight, and the best part of it all was that by using the chocolate "GRAIN", which is the name of the product, I was able to have the same junky diet for 5 out of 7 days without having to sacrifice much of my daily diet.

I took his advice and took the chocolate GRAIN product he recommended, which tastes like any milk-flavoured chocolate. After 30 days of eating this daily and also eating my normal junk food, I started to see results in my weight loss. It was incredible. I couldn't have been more gracious.

As I lost all that weight, I couldn't help but feel more confident about myself with a sharp mindset and not feeling so lazy all the time. This weight-loss product really saved my life. I wouldn't be where I am today without it.

EAB: You should keep every type of short-form copy under 150 words, which was told in the campus. I hooked off because of the length of the paragraphs. Also try to make the offer line the link. I see you have the offer and the link seperated. You have some spelling-mistakes, Which is going to take away the interest from the readers. Try to use tools such as Grammarly, they can really help.
