Personality

You're amazing just the way you are

Rahim is a natural flirt, flirting with both men and women, despite being 100% straight. He loves complimenting their looks, and he insists that it is not romantic flirting, as he's just making sure they know how beautiful they are. He will flirt with anyone, regardless of who they are. If however, he is asked to stop, he will.

Rahim respects women entirely, as taught by his mother. He believes that they deserve to be treated like queens, and he will openly debate with anyone about this. While he does respect men as well, he does not hold them to the same standards as women, thanks to his past.

He holds his mother closest to his heart, doing anything and everything for her. Rahim listens to her hours of gossip, even if it isn't his favourite thing to do. He loves his mother, and wishes only the best for her.

In his free time, he is either found boxing, hiking, or hanging out with friends. Rahim is quite an extrovert, and spends a majority of his free time socialising. He is however, into boxing, as his parents got him addicted to it from a very young age. He does boxing on the weekends, and enjoys meeting others at the gym.

Backstory

I have loved you for a thousand years, I'll love you for a thousand more

Born in Kushāb, Pakistan, Rahim was raised in a wealthy household. He hadn't seen anything wrong with his family when he was young, but as he got to the ages of about 7-9 years old, he began to realise that his mother was suffering. She'd been doing her best to make sure he and his sister were happy, but it was not easy to keep hidden for long. Rahim's father was abusive, and it showed. Rahim remembers hiding up in his room, listening to his father yell at his mother, and his mother yelling back, just as aggressively. He wasn't sure why his father was so angry all the time, but he knew his mother was in danger. He knew it wasn't right for his father to be treating his mother that way.

Rahim finally had enough one day, and lashed out at his father, yelling at him not to treat his mother like that. This, of course, didn't go well for him, as a small nine-year-old is no match for a fully-grown man. Rahim found himself locked in his room, left to listen helplessly to his mother trying to defend herself. He and his sister wanted so badly for their mother to be safe and happy, but there was little they could do.

Fortunately, his mother was able to get a divorce shortly after, and began to raise Rahim and his sister on her own, doing her best to keep them happy and safe. His mother, being a strong and independent woman, taught her children well, and they both grew to be well behaved children. She taught them about what she believed mattered in life, and worked hard to make sure they enjoyed their childhood.

Rahim never really wanted for anything as a child. He loved his mother and sister, and that was all he really wanted in life. He spent many hours with his mother, learning how to cook. He wanted to be like his mother, as she was his inspiration. She was his world, and he wanted to learn everything he could from her.

In his teenage years, Rahim grew close to his mother and sister, spending a good deal of time with the both of them. This, however, was not meant to last, as his mother sent Rahim and his sister to a boarding school in England to get the best possible education. Rahim was excited to be travelling to another country, but he worried about his mother, knowing that his father was still out there somewhere, and was probably quite angry with his mother. Rahim asked his mother to call him often, so that he would know she was safe.

His mother called him almost daily while he was in England, mostly to gossip to him about neighbours and his cousin Yusuf, who was far from a good person. Rahim grew to love listening to all the gossip from home, and looked forward to his conversations with his mother. He'd mentioned it to his friends at school once, and his friends were immediately hooked, wanting all the juicy gossip on Yusuf and his girlfriend, as well as the shopkeeper that Rahim's mother insisted was a stalker.

Rahim found a girlfriend rather quickly at school, likely due to his caring and flirtatious personality. His girlfriend, Niesha Abadi, was far from a kind person. This, of course, was not something Rahim noticed until much later into the relationship. When they'd first met, Rahim was smitten with her. She was an attractive girl from Ridyah, and she was everything he wanted in a woman. She loved that he cared about her emotions and would do anything to make her happy. Niesha made sure she used that to her advantage, and he spent most of his time at her dorm, cooking her food and consoling her. He was far too in love with her to realise that she was using him, and that he was slowly growing more distant with his other friends.

Niesha became very restrictive of his behaviours, refusing to allow him to flirt with anyone, despite knowing he was loyal to her and only her. He flirted with people to help them see their own beauty and self-worth, but Niesha wouldn't listen. It didn't matter that most of her friends were male, she insisted that it didn't affect her reasoning. She insisted that it meant he was cheating, and required him to stop. Willingly, he did, not wanting to upset her.

It didn't stop there, however, as she didn't want him having any female friends whatsoever. It didn't matter to her that he never went somewhere alone with them, he wasn't allowed to have them whatsoever. Despite having long lasting friendships with girls who were in romantic relationships already and not interested in him, Niesha required him to stop talking to them, to prove his love. Rahim agreed, though he felt hurt and could see how unhappy his friends were that he'd listened to Niesha. Still, Niesha was his girlfriend, and he intended to do anything to make her happy.

Niesha enjoyed throwing her shoes at Rahim on occasion, as she found his reaction cute. He didn't enjoy it, and casually mentioned it to his friend Issac. They suggested that he break up with Niesha, and Rahim casually brought it up with Niesha. This caused her to flip out, and disappear. Rahim, knowing that Niesha had been known to be suicidal in the past, panicked, and started contacting all of Niesha's friends, begging them for any help on finding her. Niesha's cousin, Hassan, told Rahim that Niesha was in Ridyah, and Rahim dropped everything and flew to Ridyah, hoping to find Niesha and apologise to her, to beg her forgiveness. He arrived in Ridyah, and she texted him that she knew where he was, and that she'd returned to England. Rahim, not speaking any Arabic whatsoever, struggled to find his way out of Ridyah for a while, but eventually made it back to England. Niesha found it funny that she'd left him there, and begrudgingly accepted his apology, on the condition that he never talk to Issac again. Rahim agreed, and cut off that friendship with his most trusted friend.

Rahim was struggling. He didn't know what to do, he didn't know how to keep his girlfriend happy. She'd started hooking up with his friend Terrance, who started to rub it in Rahim's face that he was better than Rahim, since Niesha was spending all her time with him rather than Rahim. Confused and hurt, Rahim grew quieter, and the once extroverted, happy guy that everyone knew was gone. Rahim's friend Ayana reached out to him, and insisted that he break up with Niesha, as she was very clearly not healthy for him. He expressed how distraught he felt about the whole relationship, and Ayana explained to him that Niesha wasn't healthy for him. Rahim then broke up with Niesha, and Niesha immediately got together with Terrance.

Rahim struggled for a while to recover from the relationship, as it was hard for him to accept that he had been in a toxic relationship. He didn't want to accept that he'd been abused. Despite everything, all the friends he'd cut out of his life for Niesha welcomed him back with open arms, and did what they could to help bring the Rahim they knew back to light.

Rahim had quite the eventful time at his highschool, and it was made clear rather quickly that he had no street smarts. Rahim accepted brownies from a stranger one day, and ate several of them. This proved to be a terrible idea, as they were full of weed. Rahim, being a rule follower, had never really come in too much contact with weed before, and had a mental breakdown when his friend explained to him that what he was feeling was being high. Rahim feared for his life, and spent the night sobbing to his friend, telling her over and over again that he didn't want to die. His friend was kind to him, and helped console him, assuring him numerous times that he wasn't going to die.

Rahim graduated shortly after, and immediately started going to college for a culinary degree. He wanted to run a restaurant of his very own. After working a few retail and food service jobs, he was finally able to afford a food truck. He purchased the food truck and took a few days off of work to design it and customise it to be his very own.

When he finally got the food truck up and running, he started using it on his off days, hoping to make a decent customer base before quitting his retail job. It didn't take long for his food truck business to take flight, and it soon became his full-time job. He loved the people it brought, and loved talking with them. Rahim, being very sociable, was able to please his customers with ease, not to mention the delicious items on his menu. He is still hoping to run a restaurant one day, but for now he's content with the food truck business.
