What Is Propane?

Undoubtedly, propane is the most flexible of all bottled gas formats.

A form of liquified petroleum gas, propane (C_3H_8), has a lower boiling point than its close cousin butane, at -42 degrees Celsius compared to the -2 degrees of butane. This crucial characteristic permits the fuel to vaporize into gas at seriously low temperatures — meaning its function isn't affected by cold climates and making it ideal for use in Ireland's winters.

Furthermore, this also allows you to store the gas outside your home, and order in bulk volumes — reassured that its performance will not be affected as the seasons change.

Clean-burning, efficient, and economical — it's the consummate all-rounder for domestic fuel applications.

Delivery and Sizes of Our Propane Gas Cylinders

Our commitments to you are that we will deliver your propane to your specifications, on time, and at an affordable price — pledges we take seriously at Portagas.

Local orders are despatched from our Armagh depot and swiftly conveyed to your door — with our recently expanded fleet of vehicles, your propane arrives safely and punctually.

If you live a little further afield — you can still enjoy the benefits of Portagas' premium yet competitively priced fuel. With 17 LPG wholesalers and suppliers across the island of Ireland, you're always within reach of the Portagas brand. And, boasting a vast stock of cylinders and trucks on the road — we can react to your orders pleasingly rapidly.

As consummate propane gas suppliers, we have bottles for every demand requirement:

- 11kg gas cylinder (10.9 kg) — for low-use applications such as patio heaters and BBQs.
- 17kg — for higher demand uses, e.g. cooking and clothes drying.
- 34kg — ideal for central heating and real flame fires.
- 47kg — full home heating, cooking, and industrial/commercial applications.

Furthermore, due to the low boiling point of propane permitting storage, you can order two or more bottles — utilizing a changeover valve to ensure you never run out of gas. As a responsible fuel retailer, we carry a mammoth stock of propane and propane accessories — to ensure you get the most out of your clean fuel.
