Jesus Christ is dead. Somehow, that isn't the worst part of Dean's week.

→ Redemption Road (652 222 words)

With Castiel having set himself up as the new God, drunk on power and volatile as a nuclear reactor, Dean, Sam and Bobby find themselves on the run from the jealous, capricious monster wearing the face of their friend. Desperate for protection and wary of his brother's mental state since Castiel unlocked Sam's memories of Hell, Dean knows Castiel must be defused before he can wreak further havoc in Heaven or n Earth. Although Bobby advocates for destroying Castiel by whatever means necessary, Dean is convinced the Cas he once knew still remains, buried somewhere beneath the mass of poisonous souls and calling out for help. Determined to save the angel who once rescued him from Hell and redefined his purpose on life, Dean himself must resist the allure of the false deity vying for his obedience, and come to terms with the knowledge, long-suppressed, that his feelings for Castiel run much deeper than brotherhood. It is this bond, and the dubious distinction of the Righteous Man, that will ultimately grant Dean access to where Castiel's grace languishes in Purgatory. However, what Dean brings back with him is broken, angry, and only half-angel, certainly not the Castiel he remembers - and nor is it the only thing that returns to Earth with them...

"I want to have sex," Castiel announces suddenly.

Dean chokes on his gulp of Baha Blast."

Wherein Dean teaches Cas how to have sex, and Cas teaches Dean why to have sex.

→ Sleep In Heaven Peace (41 674 words)

Dean wants to have a nice, peaceful Christmas for nice, but it seems like the universe won't let him.

→ The Inexhaustible Silence Of Houses (31 820 words)

Almost two years after the world doesn't ends, Castiel falls from grace - and loses his voice in the process. It is the impetus for confession and change; before long, he is settling into a loving relationship with Dean, the Winchesters are tired, and hunting for a place to land had taken precedence to hunting anything else. Dean and Castiel fall in love with the strange little house on the end of Swallowtail Drive, and for a little while life is as it should be - sweet, affectionate, and beginning afresh. But more and more Castiel sees and hears things in the house that beg the question of whether or not a place itself can be alive. The walls and rooms seem to shift and grow and breathe, and one night, Dean comes home from a hunt changed in a way that Castiel cannot explain. In the months that follow, their domestic bliss takes turns for the dark and sour, and the confusion of their circumstances will ultimately test everything Castiel knows about the man he loves, and everything he believes to be true.

→ The Prophet Must Die (54 455 words)

“What about Castiel? He seems helpful... and dreamy.” Something about the comment just isn’t sitting right, and Dean’s jaw twitches. He stares at the wall in the dark, and at a quarter past four in the morning, it hits him. “Asshole,” Dean hisses under his breath, sitting up straight, “that sonofabitch kept publishing.”

→ The Story Of You And Me (54 935 words)

Dean wakes up in bed next to a very human Castiel, and a journal in his own handwriting that tells him it’s two years in the future. The house looks a lot like Bobby’s, and Sam lives there too... He just can’t remember how they got from angels falling in the sky - to comfortable domesticity. While there is much in the journal Dean doesn’t remember, there is much of their story he’s always known. And as he settles into the routine of his new life and relationship with Castiel, it quickly becomes something he doesn’t know how to live without.

• STRIPPER AU

→ Bare (50 589 words)

Okay, so Dean was checking out a stripper, and a male one at that, but he didn’t care. He was already so drunk that he wouldn’t even bat an eye if a flying elephant suddenly landed in the room. Although a part of him did wonder why there was a male stripper at Sam’s bachelor party. Well, technically there were two strippers, the wing guy and some brunette who was currently on Ahs’s lap.

→ Have Love, Will Travel (94 050 words)

Castiel Novak is a reclusive writer with a childhood so tragic it’s left him terrified to leave his home - until his overbearing brother, Gabriel, drags him out for a night on the town full of booze and strip clubs, and he encounters Dean Winchester, a mesmerizing and mysterious stripper with secrets of his own. Both men find themselves inexplicably drawn to each other, and soon Dean’s private dances for Castiel become much more, as both men confess their troubles and find solace in each other’s company. But neither can seem to find the courage to take their relationship further than the intimacy of the club’s VIP Room - and just when Dean’s own brother gives him the excuse he needs to finally admits his feelings, Dean discovers something that brings it all crumbling down. Will they find a way past their demons and their trust issues, and back to each other?

• TEACHER/STUDENT AU

→ 300 Things (76 863 words)

Dean’s life at twenty-four makes him feel like he’s forty - he works two jobs to help pay bills for his house and put his genius little brother through private school, and has spent six years (on and off, let’s be honest) working on his mechanical engineering degree at KU. With so much of his life devoted to his family, Dean has little time in his schedule for class and no time for social interaction. He must take his last literature class now, his spring already filled with those left for his major... except that none of the English classes will fit his schedule. This is how Dean grovels and begs Dr. Castiel Milton to make a special arrangement for him and Dr. Milton does.

→ Blackboard

Castiel Novak is a college English teacher, in a rather inappropriate relationship with Dean Winchester, who happens to be one of his students. But although their arrangement is one that works perfectly for the both of them, Castiel is starting to worry that maybe keeping it impersonal will be harder than he thought.

16 Year Old Dean Winchester's life is turned upside down when his Dad marries his current girlfriend Sophie and Dean is about to gain a new step Brother in the form of Castiel Novak. Playing happy families is clearly not on the cards when Dean realises he will never be able to think of Castiel as his brother and his feelings are taking a much more forbidden route.

→ Little Motels (238 655 words)

After John's death, Dean must travel to California to find his estranged brother and deliver the bad news. He takes Castiel with him, despite the newness of their relationship, and finds himself falling in love while staying in a series of little motels. What he discovers after arriving at Stanford is enough to destroy what's left of him, but Dean isn't willing to give up what they have together that easily.

→ Lock, Stock & Two Smokin' Winchesters (29 392 words)

"Alright Sammy, you show me how to control a wild fucking Russian and I'll show you how to control an unhinged, pig-feeding gangster!" There's an unspoken rule in London's underground illegal boxing scene that if you've gotta deal with Crowley, you've just got to make sure that you don't end up in his debt. Because if you end up in his debt, then you're in his pocket. And then you're fucked. Dean and his brother Sam are fucked. Castiel Krushnic is the underground bareknuckle boxing champion; which makes him harder than a coffin nail. Dean has the fun task of persuading the blue-eyed psycho to fight for them, in any way he can. Otherwise they are proper fucked.

→ Metaphysical Gravity (78 970 words)

Vampire Castiel Collins is awakened from his tomb by down-on-his-luck author Chuck Shurley. With Chuck's help [and blood] Castiel sets out to make a life for himself in Collinsport, restoring his old home and hopefully being reunited with the reincarnation of his former love, Dean Winchester.

→ Monsters Of Men (62 834 words)

Life is relatively simple for Dean: get a contract, kill something, collect money, get drunk and fuck. That's how it's been for a long while now, and that's the way he likes it. However, he never thought he'd have an angel in his house, and he sure as hell never guessed he'd think about keeping it.

→ Old Enough (28 513 words)

Dean hated the fact that his parents didn't trust him. He didn't need a goddamn babysitter. He could look after himself, and his little brother, for the whole of one little night. What were they afraid of? That he'd burn the house to the ground?

→ On The House (34 424 words)

"In a past life," the guy at the end of the bar began, "I lived in Kansas. Was a hunter. Hunted things. Hunted things." He stared into his glass, swirling the liquid. Castiel sighed inwardly. The morose drunks were always the hardest to gauge. Some wanted sympathy; some wanted to get angry; some wanted to be cheered up. Some just wanted to talk. This guy wasn't sloppy-drunk, at least. Didn't seem particularly drunk at all, really, though in general hitting the whiskey at 6:30 on a Tuesday afternoon wasn't a good sign. And anyway, Cas was perfectly willing to admit, if he had to play bartender-therapist, it's nice when his patron-patient's disgustingly attractive.

→ Painted Angels (105 719 words)

Author Castiel Novak has finally hit the big time, with a book based on his failed college relationship with a brilliant painter. He's put all his pain behind him, but at a book signing, he comes face to face with Dean Winchester for the first time in twelve years, and the reunion doesn't go like Cas hoped. Dean's a broken man, with a lot of scars and secrets, shoulders weighed down by his demons and self loathing.

Cas sees a second chance with the man he's never stopped loving, but Dean's moved on, and is about to get married. Sam launches a "brilliant" plan to reunite his brother and his best friend, but Cas is worried it will all blow up in their faces, and he'll go through the agony of losing Dean a second time.

→ Rings Of Conviction (40 486 words)

"Do you want to kiss me?" Dean asks, suddenly turning serious. Castiel stares, contemplating this question. "Yes." No money, no decisions, no control, this is year 2897.

→ Save a Horse, Ride a Cowboy (67 289 words)

Sam and Dean Winchester are owners of Winchester Farms, a large Quarter Horse ranch. Sam loans their bunkhouse to a writer so he can get some privacy to finish his latest book.

→ Teach Me Something New (69 648 words)

→ The Odd Couple (46 414 words)

When Castiel's girlfriend kicks him out, his best friend, Dean offers him a place to stay. Will these two opposites drive each other crazy or will they finally see what everybody around them had known for a long time? That opposites really do attract.

→ The Shadow At My Window (slight au) (147 814 words)

Castiel, a fledgling angel, can not seem to stop himself from visiting the human boy that leaves his window open at night. At first, it's only to get a glimpse of humanity... but all that changes the night he saves the boy's life.

→ Try-Something Tuesday (48 284 words)

Dean Winchester teaches a third-grade class. He's new to this whole "bisexual" thing - but by pure happenstance, he meets Castiel: a particularly dapper male librarian who moonlights as a substitute teacher. Dean's curious and Castiel is willing, so why the hell not?

Except, fate never intended it to be one-time-only...

→ Twist And Shout (97 556 words)

What begins as a transforming love between Dean Winchester and Castiel Novak in the summer of 1965 quickly derails into something far more tumultuous when Dean is drafted in the Vietnam War. Thought the two both voice their relationship is one where saying goodbye is never a real truth, their story becomes fraught with the tragedy of circumstance. In an era where homosexuality was especially vulnerable, Twist and Shout is the story of the love transcending time, returning over and over in its many forms, as faithful as the sea.

→ You And Me And One Spotlight (37 320 words)

Dean just happened to walk into the classroom of the hottest professor he has ever seen and according to Sam, he has a nerd kink. Castiel, the shy and reserved professor has quite the past looming behind him and can't seem to stop wallowing in his own misery. It's up to Dean, Sam and Gabriel to help him.

→ You're the Only Stranger I Need (39 730 words)

When Castiel receives a text from a stranger, he finds himself engaging in conversations daily. He's drawn to the outgoing college student and longs to interact with the other man as often as he can. Slowly, he finds himself falling in love with the other and can't imagine ever meeting a more beautiful person. The only problem? He's never actually met this other man.

→ What Are The Chances (74 55 words)

Dean and Sam Winchester are on their own, Dean is 28 and Sam is 21. Sam is dating a guy Dean's aged named Gabriel who just so happens to work with Dean at the Roadhouse Bar & Grille. What are the chances that Gabriel has a brother? A younger brother who may just be into Dean. John is homophobic to the extreme and yet both of his sons are gay. The real kicker? He doesn't know. What's going to happen when John suddenly pays them a visit and the truth comes out?

→ White Blank Page (54 727 words)

When Castiel realized he was in love with his best friend, he decided to leave Lawrence, because he didn't want to stand in the way of Dean's happiness. They meet again five years later.
