

Holy CRAAP

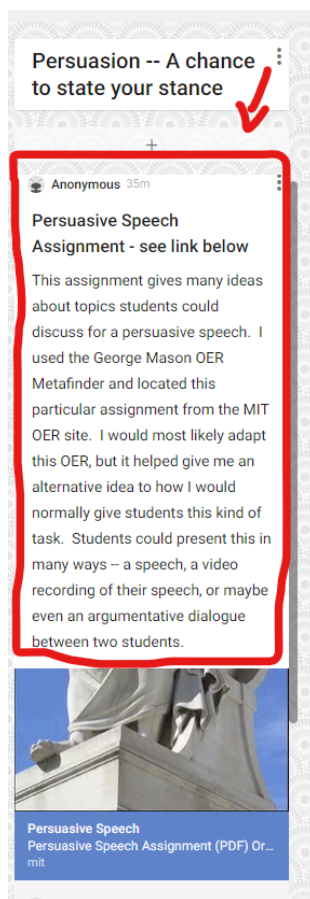

Summary Reflection

I found this exercise enlightening. It dawned on me when I was instructed to reevaluate the resources I chose that I did not thoroughly examine whether they stand up to the CRAAP test. In many ways, not all resources and content need to be scholarly peer reviewed, but it helped me gain perspective on my educational practice -- perhaps I need to be more thorough.

I also appreciated seeing how my CRAAP evaluation stood up against other's posts. I felt this was a valuable learning moment for me and I would consider implementing a similar activity in my own class. Seeing other people's comments helped me realize how not everyone views resources the same way, even if asked to review them through the same conceptual lens, i.e. the CRAAP test. Overall, this was a helpful exercise.

Below is the image of my Padlet post:

In this post I made sure to comment on how I would use this activity with my students.

Volunteering through the Workplace

marilynnigro 7d

This article speaks directly to the impact of volunteering through the workplace. It reinforces the values that employees have towards a workplace that encourages and rewards volunteerism

The article is current and provides a different perspective on staffing events with corporate volunteers. Many mega events use this strategy and/or seconding employees for the duration of an event in exchange for sponsorship. It also provides students with creative ideas for dealing with corporations.

Customer Service

Customer Service is a topic in which there are many different resources available. Videos in particular often tug on the heartstrings and solidify the message. I used the Merlot.org search engine to find this video which simply explains the difference between customer service and customer experience

This PowerPoint is straightforward and easy for students to follow to begin to understand plagiarism. It also includes a reference/suggestion to using Turnitin as a way for students to self-screen their work for issues, so they can be corrected before submission.

Persuasion -- A chance to state your stance

Persuasive Speech Assignment - see link below

This assignment gives many ideas about topics students could discuss for a persuasive speech. I used the George Mason OER Metafinder and located this particular assignment from the MIT OER site. I would most likely adapt this OER, but it helped give me an alternative idea to how I would normally give students this kind of task. Students could present this in many ways -- a speech, a video recording of their speech, or maybe even an argumentative dialogue between two students.
