

SL: Do You Need a “Backup Plan?”

Hey {{ first_name }},

The most common question I get from newcomers about making money online is whether or not it's stable.

Whether or not they need a “backup plan”

And look, the answer is different for everybody.

If you're expecting to work 1 hour a week and make millions every month that easily,

You're probably going to end up quitting because it's “too hard.”

But the reality is simple.

I would love this to be a short and quick “No” but that's just not true.

You're going to need to put in a decent amount of effort a day in order to become financially free.

It's just the reality of things. But it's easier than it sounds.

When in history has it ever been this easy to make millions from the comfort of your Miami Beach balcony?

Or from a cabana in Dubai?

All while also having time to do whatever you want on top of that.

Short answer: No bro. You don't need a "backup plan."

But I said that assuming that you're willing to try at least a little bit every day.

Success comes with dedication.

And if you're willing to sacrifice at least a few hours every day to build a beautiful lifestyle.

Then you're already ahead of 99% of people.

I'm attaching a link at the bottom of this message.

If you're willing to make this month the last month you'll EVER need a 9-5...

Feel free to click this link for limited-time access to my private network.

But this isn't for everybody.

Do you have what it takes?