

Anias and Boo had barely made it out of their home that was falling apart just in time as so many of those creatures had appeared out of nowhere just moments later. As they rushed through the land they barely got away from many of the smaller creatures and were able to make makeshift weapons of large logs and rocks to fight off any of the larger ones they came across. Boo was not very good at fighting though as she was more than scared out of her mind the whole time. Luckily though she was a fast runner and managed to quickly run them both away from the slower creatures. After what felt like days of running, fighting and hiding the girls finally found a camp of other Skire that were staying together to keep safe. They started to travel with the small group as they found their way all together to a much larger group area that they all hoped would be much safer. But sadly it was not. As by the time they all found the area it was being stormed by the creatures of all sizes. With Anias' quick thinking though they found a way to get past many of the creatures until it happened. Just as they thought they had gotten past all the creatures one came out of nowhere and hit Boo across the face and head as she was running with Anias held onto her back. This knocked Boo to the ground and sent Anias flying as well. Anias groaned in pain as she quickly sat up and looked to Boo who laid on the ground unmoving as the creature moved closer to her. Anias felt her blood boils as she rushed to her feet and found the first large thing she could and hit the creature with it. Luckily this did stun the creature and it let out a loud sound as it backed away just enough for Anias to grab up Boo into her arms and start to run again. As Anias ran like her life depended on it as it really did she looked down to Boo in her arms and saw blood running down her face. Anias felt panicked as she saw this and somehow managed to run faster and harder than ever before as she had to keep the love of her life safe. After running for what felt like hours Anias managed to find an abandoned house and rushed inside. Once inside she laid Boo on one of the couches before rushing over and shouting the door and pushing as many things in front of the door as she could and keeping as many windows shut as she could. Anias then looked at Boo who lay unmoving and bleeding still. She quickly rushed around the house looking for anything to patch up Boo's wounded head. Anias was able to just find some bandages and rags but knew it was better than nothing. Quickly she rushed back to Boo and started to put pressure onto the wound with one of the rags. Slowly she was able to get the bleeding to stop and used another rag to clean off the area before wrapping up the area on Boo's head with the few bandages that she had found. Once she had her taken care of she pulled her girlfriend close to her and held her in her arms hoping that Boo would wake up soon. Anias had no idea how long she had been sitting holding Boo as she softly felt her breath in her arms and heard screams and monstrous sounds outside when suddenly it all went quiet. Boo slowly opened her eyes and looked up to Anias to say something just as everything started to shake again, but this time it was worse than ever before and something didn't feel right. Was this the end of it all?