Petter Baiestorf presents: Canibal Films - behind the scenes of the gorechanchada

> “A declaration of war from those who have nothing and do everything against those that have everything and do nothing.”

(atualizado em 17/03/2020):

In the 80’s, young people around the world grabbed VHS camcorders to shot their first movies; this disorganized movement became known as “Shot On Video”, SOV for short. In Brazil, lead under Petter Baiestorf, one of the first groups to make SOV’s was Canibal Filmes (Cannibal Films).

Referenced in the “Cinema Marginal”, underground movie movement, and the movies produced at Boca do Lixo, in São Paulo, Canibal Filmes began their extremely low budget horror and scifi movies production, also inventing its own distribution system, through mail, to reach every corner of Brazil, USA, Canada and european countries.

In the 90’s, Canibal Filmes was the major responsible for an independent market of video productions in Brazil, using the same blueprints left by the zine makers and underground bands already did. Their movies took by storm punk shows, death and black metal shows, and specially grindcore/goregrind. Already at those early times, they made deals with bands and other shock moviemakers. Their production method inspired almost all the brazilian moviemakers that are to the date producing horror and scifi flicks, specially by showing that it was feasible to dodge lack of funding and resources.

In the dawn of the 21st century, Petter Baiestorf and Cesar Souza wrote the “Manifesto Canibal”, cannibal manifesto, teaching how to make movies without money and resources, and became a reference to young artists alike.

With the outcome of digital media, Canibal Filmes continued its story of independent moviemaking, accomplishing a series of horror flicks highlighted at several national and international festivals, such as “Zombio” - the official very first time a brazilian movie depicted zombies -, “Zombio 2” - selected by more than fifty fantastic movies awards and festivals worldwide -. “Ninguém Deve Morrer” - best movie, best production and best editing award at the Guarú Fantástico Festival in Guarulhos - São Paulo, and “Ándale!” - experimental short movie winner of several experimental movie awards. The prolific production of Canibal Filmes comprises over 100 movies accomplished independently, over 30 years of movie production.

"Canibal Filmes – Os Bastidores da Gorechanchada"

The book - roughly translated to “Cannibal Films - the behind the scenes of the ‘gorechanchada’ (that plays with the word ‘gore’ and ‘chanchada’, a brazilian known movie movement from the 60’s to the 70’s), will tell the story of Canibal Filmes, 'cannibal films', that began in 1992 movie production based on VHS format, and where its crew and former crew share hilarious tales from behind the scenes that have lots of fanzine makers, punk and metal bands, and producers that were known in the scene back in the 1990's; they'll also tell how they survived the great migration from analog to digital, and how they adapted to these virtual times but still clinging to a completely independent movie production system, never having a dime from public money such as public biddings, remaining true to its ideals of movie creation and production , for over three decades.

The most astonishing thing during this journey, that began in Palmitos - a tiny countryside town in Santa Catarina state - in a place with truly zero traditions regarding films or moviemaking, is that it made a huge influence in Brazil's largest metropolis like São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Porto Alegre or Belo Horizonte, with its brand new and innovative approach on distribution and production throughout the whole country, in a time before the Internet.

The author, Petter Baiestorf, also co-directed some collective projects produced outside Canibal Filmes, like “As Fábulas Negras”, co-directed by Coffin Joe “Zé do Caixão”, Rodrigo Aragão and Joel Caetano, and “13 Histórias Estranhas”, a project from producer Ricardo Ghiorzi that directly involved 13 ‘fantastic movie’ directors from Brazil. He also acted and worked as a technician in several movies from movie makers like Ivan Cardoso, Dennison Ramalho, Gurcius Gewdner, Dellani Lima, among others. He was the subject of an academic study collective that released three editions of the “Cinema de Bordas” book. And also starred the documentaries “Baiestorf - Filmes de Sangueira e Mulher Pelada” (2004), from Christian Caselli and “Baiestorf” (2017), from Bruno Sant’Anna.

From fanzines to movies, from underground shows to national music festivals; from the gore VHS flicks to splatter movies made in 4K; from the nonsense comedy to political cinema, “Canibal Filmes - Os Bastidores da Gorechanchada” shows, with an agile and fun narrative, the trajectory of this one of a kind group in the brazilian arts!
