

Lauren Howard

I think the Lord of the Flies is a dystopian novel. I think this because there aren't any adults to keep the kids in check. Also the kids don't listen to the older kids. One of the older kids, Jack, shows signs of savagery. In the text, it states, "Kill the pig, cut her throat, spill the blood. "The madness came into his eyes again. "I thought I might kill." This shows that Jack is a bit savage. In the novel, it states, "No one else. They're off bathing, or eating, or playing." This shows that the kids aren't listening. There are lots of signs in the book that the island will become a dystopia.