

Over the past 2 years, I've worked shoulder-to-shoulder with my Senate Republican colleagues and Billy Bob Faulkingham in the House to build a campaign machine that's ready to put Maine Republicans in a position to take back the State House. We've focused on solutions that put families first, businesses back on their feet, and the government back in its place.

Maine Democrats have created the mess we're in—bloated state deficits, failing schools, and a government that seems more interested in stripping away parental rights than solving real problems. They're running on fumes, and their agenda is collapsing under its own weight.

I'm fired up for what's ahead. Whether I'm in the ring fighting for our shared values or helping our team deliver a knockout punch in 2026, I can promise one thing: I'll always show up for the people of Maine. I'm just a 30-year-old county boy who loves this state and hates to lose. With the momentum we're building, I have no doubt Maine's best days are still ahead of us.
