Why I'm counting benjis and you're not

[Insert company logo]

Seeing the market go down isn't the end of the world, in fact it's natural for us to see a market reset every financial year. The worrying part for me, would be entering a market with no specific game plan. Imagine The Man With No Name going into his standoff with Tuco? - if that went over your head, it's just like Tommy from Power having a gun with no bullets. Are you with me?

Here at [insert company name] we are always going in locked and loaded with a .50 BMG, ready for whatever trick the market is going to pull.

Now I'm not perfect, but with our team being 13% up this year on profits - with a 6% aim I think we're doing a damned good job. Imagine that? 13%! Might seem like nothing, but most aim for a 3% profit. Our team is killing it! How? Game planning

$AMG to the moon!

Ahhh... too the moon. My favourite time from the Covid-19 profits where people risked their life savings on $AMG because some 11 year old nerd promised them to buy the dip and it was going to the moon.

WE WOULD NEVER!

Picture this, it's 2020, everywhere is locked down, you can't see friends, family, can't go down to the local boozer, or go watch the footy with your Dad because you've been told so by the Government, then you're scrolling through Facebook and you see some guru gloating about how some stock you've never heard of is going to the moon? Jackpot! "Damn, I'm gonna bank" "I've watched the Wolf of Wall Street, I know stocks" "I need to do this!" So you reach out. You're told to sign up to trading 212 through their referral link, you deposit your life savings on $AMG at 21.67 (even that entry is poor) it goes to 50.00 + in a matter of seconds, then 60,70,80... you get the point. You've got 200 shares. You're up 40.00 per share? You've banked. But you get told to hold. So you do.

70, 60, 50, 8... you panic. You've lost everything so you sell the negative.

If I told you to jump into the ocean with hungry sharks would you? Well you already did.

Let's not make that mistake again

This will improve your financial IQ with just 10 minutes of your time!

I've got 10 years of Wall Street experience, have read 100's of books, worked alongside some of the slickest Wall Street traders you won't even know, and made every mistake you could possibly imagine, and I'm here to make sure you don't.

It's 15th September 2008, I'm just about to start my first day on Wall Street. "Gosh I'm gonna kill it" "I'm going to be a millionaire" first day in, market officially crashes. Erm...

Look I made no money, imagine starting a job and making no money? Dumb. I didn't lose much either, but I still lost. Young, no experience, panic bought, no game plan...

I wish I had a mentor.

OGs of the game like Maurice "Hank" Greenberg lost their entire net worth, why? No plan.

John Paulson's hedge fund made $20 billion in profits, how? Game plan.

Look, I'm not saying planning fixes everything and is 100% certain, but in times of crisis it's better to go in with a plan than without.

Don't be greedy trying to make a fast buck in a time of crisis. Be smart. Be patient. Like a Tiger hunting its next meal. Why go for a leftover Gazelle when you can be patient and hunt the herd that's just hid 5 minutes away?
