

SETTING

SEE – island, coconut trees, Green, waves,
Rocks, Foam, mountains

SMELL – Beach, salt water, coconuts, fresh air

HEAR – Rustling wind, crashing waves, seagulls, monkeys, coconuts falling

TOUCH – coconuts, sand between toes, zap
from trees, leaves

Character - Jack

Jack could see an island in the distance. The lush green trees swayed in the sunny morning air. The rocks were jagged and sharp and the mountains in the distance made him smile. The waves were washing up foam and drift wood.

Jack could hear the waves crashing on the shore and coconuts falling in the distance.

Seagulls were talking above him as the monkeys played in the trees.

The smell of the sea invaded his nostrils and he could taste the salt water in the air.

His feet dragged along the sea shore as his body brushed up against the smooth leaves on a leaning tree.

Character - Jack

Jack had wrangled clothes and a rustic beard that made him look ten years older than he was. His body was riddled with sores and his feet had cuts and gashes from the harsh rocks of the sea. His mood was low and he looked like a man on the verge of death.

Problem - Lost on an Island

Solution - Seen by a boat

Jack had been stranded on the unknown island for what seemed like an eternity. His body was mangled and beaten and he longed for a cosy bed and a proper meal in his belly.

Jack knew he had to get off this Island and his only chance was a rescue from a passing ship. He had saw in a movie once that lighting a fire would send out a signal of smoke that a sailor might see. He set to work and built a pyre full of branches, flax and yellow leaves.

Days had passed and the life was draining from poor Jack. He was on the edge of life and death when he caught a glimpse of a hunk of metal in the distance. With his last remaining strength, Jack struck two rocks together and a flame attacked the pile of dried vegetation. It sparked to life like a greyhound out of a box. The smoke bellowed upwards and Jack slumped to the ground. He was exhausted and now relied on one friend to keep him alive.....the smoke.