

Senator Gunnz has arrived in Philadelphia, Atlantic, to meet with voters around the city and discuss policy directly with his constituents. Senator Gunnz meets up with a group of volunteers, and they set out to flip voters. Senator Gunnz starts with a middle-aged woman. The Senator approaches the woman and begins to speak.

Gunnz: “Hey, I’m Senate Majority Leader Gunnz, and I was wondering if you have decided who you will be voting for in this upcoming election for the U.S. Senate?”

Woman: “I have my eyes on Representative Eddie, but, with that in mind, I’m open to hearing what you have to say.”

Gunnz: “Ah, I see. Well, thank you for being open to hearing my side, haha! As you already know, I am Senator Gunnz, and I am running for re-election. I am running because serving in the Senate has been the greatest honor of my life. Being able to serve you, your family, and all of your neighbors gives me joy. I also running because so much still needs to be done. We cannot afford Democrats' reckless spending and expensive policy ideas. We need a sensible idea, ideas that everyone cans stand behind. I promise to push these ideas and to put the people of this state first no matter what.”

Woman: “Senator Gunnz, you talk a good game, but how do I know that you are not like all politicians, being all talk and no action?”

Gunnz: “Because I have always fulfilled my promises to my constituents. As your Senator, I have written the legislation I promised to write and have fought for the people of this state every single day. My opponent, time and time again, has written legislation that will bankrupt this nation and put us in an economic recession. As your Senator, your pocketbook will be one of the most important things on my mind. I will not let the Democrats, or Republicans, destroy your economy and put this nation in economic distress. No one in America thrives when we are all broke. I will keep my word, and my record has shown time and time again that I do keep my word.”

Woman: “Alright, I believe you, now I do have to make or break question. What is your opinion on bringing our troops home? My older brother is currently deployed overseas, and I feel that he is fighting a never-ending, pointless, war in the middle east.”

Gunnz: “This is a great question, and please tell your brother that I thank him for his service.” The woman smiles and says, “I will.” “As a veteran, I have seen firsthand the conflicts that our politicians are throwing our troops into. As your Senator and during all of my terms as a Representative, I have constantly fought to bring our troops home. Pointless wars do nothing for the people of this nation. Nobody wins whenever there is no goal, to begin with. America needs to make its priorities straight and end the never-ending conflicts in the Middle East. We must put our troops first and protect them from terrorism and foreign countries' internal affairs. I do. However, support securing America's power across the world. We must not allow Russia or China to take our place as the world superpower. However, we can do that without sending troops everytime someone does something we disagree with.”

Woman: “That is great to hear; I think I will be voting for you in this upcoming election. Thank you for speaking with me!”

Gunnz: “No, thank you for allowing me to speak with you. Have a blessed day, and don’t forget that the only way we can keep our country on the right path is if we all get out and vote on election day. Be sure to make your voice heard!”

Woman: “I will, thank you!”

Senator Gunnz hands the woman a “Gunnz for Senate” t-shirt, shakes her hand, then walks off to find another person to speak with. Senator Gunnz walks 2 blocks before running into a young Hispanic man walking his dog. Senator Gunnz approaches the man and begins to speak.

Gunnz: “Hello, I’m Senator Gunnz, and I am running for re-election this election cycle. I was wondering if you have decided who you will be supporting in this upcoming election?”

Man: “I actually plan on supporting you, Mr. Gunnz. I would like to ask you a question, though if you don’t mind.”

Gunnz: “That’s great to hear, and no, I don’t mind; what’s your question?”

Man: “I have to get to work soon, so this has to be quick, haha. What is your policy on nonviolent drug offenders? I ask because I am one, but I got lucky, and the system didn’t lock me up for 20 years or so.”

Gunnz: “Well, my policy on nonviolent drug offenders is that they should have a maximum sentencing of no more than 5 years for the most serious drug crimes. I was a huge proponent of legalizing marijuana, and I even pushed for all citizens that were arrested, due to nonviolent marijuana-related drug offenses, to be released from jail and their records cleared. I think it is time our criminal justice system stops discriminating against our minority communities and poor communities, for people simply doing something as small as smoking a joint. The time for legal government discrimination is over. I promise you I will fight to reform our criminal justice system because it is time for a justice system that reflects the modern era. No one should go to jail in this country for smoking or eating marijuana.”

Man: “Thank you, Senator Gunnz. You have my vote 100%! Now I have to get to work, but I wish you good luck on the election!”

Gunnz: “Thank you, sir! I hope you aren’t late for your job! Have a blessed day!”

Senator Gunnz shakes the man's hand and hands him a t-shirt before heading off to join his volunteer team for lunch. After lunch, Senator Gunnz walked and talked to a few more people around the city before leaving.
