Dear Diary,
Venus, no. 20)

(5A,

Some unforgettable things happened today. I woke up this morning, the sun was shining through the curtains, brightly and these lights provided me with courage to face today. Today was my last day at work and I have been working as a part-time waiter at a restaurant for more than two years. I thought I would feel liberated because I had been tired from work, but it turned out that my biggest feeling was reluctance!

When I arrived at the restaurant, I looked at the familiar cash register. Looking back, when I first arrived, I didn't remember all the functions of the buttons and always miscalculated. Of course, the boss blamed me and I thought it was very incomprehensible, just miscalculated. However, now I think back 'fortunately, he taught me to take everything seriously always.' It is here that I learnt the correct attitude at work.

I remembered during my first year of work, a guest ordered a cup of lemon tea, but I wrote milk tea, the guest was furious, and I just kept apologizing and changed a right cup immediately. And I was thinking that if I didn't cultivate the right attitude here, maybe I would complain about why he was angry just for a drink. That memorable experience made me feel grateful for everything I have learned here.

After work, when I was ready to leave, my colleague told me that we were going out for a party dinner and we had a fantastic time.

I'm sitting on my bed writing this, remembering all the fun things that happened today. I hope tomorrow is just as good!
