

fult was a hot midafternoon, Daisy pulled down on his hat to cover his eyes a little against the unrelenting sun that was shining into his eyes and making finding Wisteria in the garden harder, he finally felt secure to take the hatchling out too it to try and take it out more for fresh air, although full of pollen was a nice change of pace too the air inside of the house he pulled apart a section of a bush to look inside to see if the snekket was hiding within finding a sprout kernel chewing on a flower, looking over at Daisy it hesitated before running off with the flower still in its mouth.

Wisteria brushed past a beautiful patch of flowers not being all that delicate with them, looking down there was a minmite looking absolutely mortified about the crushed flowers in the walking disasters wake, looking up as it too was almost crushed, dashing off to who knows where, Wisteria watching in curiosity of course decided to chase the weird fast moving insect gleefully chasing the terrified thing who ended up running into Daisy, He looked over in curiosity at what had bumped into him seeing Wisteria finally.

The snekket looked exhausted, panting and kind of looked like they need water Daisy looked concerned helping them back home, helping the hatchling become less dehydrated gently scolding Wisteria for getting out of his eyesight, the other didn't seem to even slightly care and once Daisy noticed he rolled he just kind of sighed feeling a little defeated when Wisteria got back up to chase their own tail.

Daisy spoke after watching for a moment before speaking again loud enough to get there attention holding a muffin in front of their face they got from the kitchen, realizing Wisteria had never had one before, que the confused sniffing and the little nibble before it was promptly yanked out of his nub and consumed paper lining and all, a little shocked Daisy stood there just kind of watching as his snekket friend wiped the crumbs off their face licking a few off, not figuring they would like it that much they decided to take a trip to the local bakery to get them more things to try, praying that Wisteria wouldn't tear the place apart and he'd pay for the whole shops supply worth of food.

Pushing into the bakery, there was a small chime of a bell above the door, a "Hold on a moment, i'll be right with you!" could be heard across the cozy bakery, the room smelled like vanilla and fresh bread, the room wasn't too bright and was easy on the eyes, the Baker came out with flour on his nubs smiling at Daisy and gasping softly when they saw Wisteria, they spoke for a little while about everything then about Daisy's order, Wisteria pulled on the leash a little trying to get to an expensive looking cake but luckily the leash was just a little too short.

Daisy Picked up the box of sweets, it was quite heavy but the food inside looked delicious and was freshly made, the box warmed Daisys nubs up a little too much not wanting to hold it for long they coaxed Wisteria to follow as they started to walk back, going back home he gently placed them on the counter, picking a random thing out of it they gave it too Wisteria to try, They seemed to like the one Daisy had picked out because it had jam in the center, getting a towel the cleaned some of it off their face so it wouldn't stain their face any but just allowed them to eat it their pace, as long as it wasn't so fast they'd start choking, slowly handing them the things he had bought he watched them chew threw them like they were nothing enjoying most of it.

Eventually when they got too a blackberry one, Wisteria made a weird face scrunching there snout a little before trying to give it back to daisy, eventually just dropping it on the floor, Daisy was a bit confused but figured they just must have not liked the taste, picking it up and cleaning it, just hoping Wisteria would like the rest.