This month, I read We Should Hang Out Sometime by Josh Sundquist. He wrote this book in an interesting way, where each chapter would be about a different girl. In the book, Josh wanted a girlfriend, but never had a successful relationship in any of his school years, and that led to him thinking that there was a problem. So, years later, he went to all the girls he liked, and asked them what went wrong. However, none of them gave him any specific answer, and he realized that there wasn't any problem with him. He realized that the problem was him believing that there was a problem. Once he realized that, there was one more chapter in the book. This chapter turned out to be different from the rest.

One thing I learned from this book is that Josh never had a successful girlfriend, and wanted to see if there was a problem, or reason why. He never found a problem, and he realized that there wasn't ever a problem. I think that this book is saying that you should always just believe in yourself, and to not get in your head about simple things.

This book matters because it shows that you may not be successful in life; but just believe in yourself, and you will be successful. Josh never had a successful relationship, but once he believed in himself, it ended up working. This shows that believing in yourself matters. I would rate this book a 9/10, because it was very entertaining, and had little graphs that I thought were a good idea, and was written in a really good formatted way. I would recommend this book to anyone who likes funny romance books.
