Do you work or are you a student?

Hi, I'm currently a 4th year IT Management Student at the University of Waterloo which is located in Canada. What's cool about my program is that besides studying, in certain terms I would have to do internships which means that there will be terms where I will be a full-time Student and then there will be terms where I will be working full-time which is kind of cool. → tốt nha

If you could choose to study another subject, what would you choose?

For the second question, if you could choose to study another subject, I would probably choose HVAC which stands for Heating, Ventilation, and Air Conditioning. The reason why I want to choose this is because it is interesting and it is a... well graduating with a degree in that field would basically guarantee you a job in Canada because it is a field that is very much needed. Canada lacks HVAC companies and HVAC is very essential in Canada because you need to... Canadians need to keep their heating, and AC in check throughout the whole year

In fact, graduating with a degree in this field would almost certainly secure employment in Canada, as the demand for HVAC professionals is substantial due to the essential need for Canadians to maintain their heating and air conditioning systems throughout the year, given the country's varied climate. Therefore, if I had the chance to pursue a different program, HVAC would be my preferred choice

The person that I would like to study with is An. She is my girlfriend. We met at a school club, specifically a Vietnamese school club. I think. I met her. I mean... I think I talked to her because she was the only person that was from Hanoi which is the city that I came from. And yeah so I think we clicked instantly, we talked a lot that night and then one thing led to another, a few days after I invited her, sorry I asked her on a date and then I think we got along really well. Yeah so long story short, she's now my girlfriend. And the reason why I like to study with her is because I think when we're together like studying, umm we're both very focused. Even though we are not in the same program, we don't go to the same university. She goes to Laurier university, I go to the University of Waterloo. they're both in the same city but it's not the same university and we're also from different programs as well but when we sit down to study together, we're very focused so we get work done really well.. uhhh really quickly which is one of the things that I like when I study with her. And then another thing is that since she's my girlfriend, it is very convenient for me to after a study session we just cook or we just relax together, have fun, spend time together, yeah it is just convenient and it's just a good way for me to just relax and ease off my mind after a intense study session. So yeah that's why I like to study with An.

Who this person is

The person I enjoy studying with is An, who is currently my girlfriend.

How you know him/her

Regarding how I met her, we first crossed paths at a Vietnamese school club. Specifically, I approached her because she was from Hanoi, my hometown. In fact, I believe we clicked instantly as we engaged in deep conversations, and before long, one thing led to another. A few days later, I gathered the courage to ask her on a date, and from that moment, our relationship blossomed.

Why you would like to study or work with him/her

There are several reasons why I love collaborating with her.

Firstly, despite attending different universities, studying together is remarkably productive, allowing us to accomplish tasks efficiently. This collaborative approach not only enhances our understanding of the subjects but also strengthens our bond as we navigate through our respective courses.

Secondly, since she is my girlfriend, it is enjoyable to unwind after our study sessions by cooking, relaxing, and spending quality time together. Indeed, our relationship adds a level of convenience and relaxation to the entire process. Therefore, studying with An provides me with both academic support and a comforting post-study routine, making it an enjoyable and beneficial experience

- what it is

Well, the activity that I do to help me keep paying attention to my study is to drink a cup of tea, which is a simple solution but can take effect immediately. I usually take one cup in the morning with breakfast and another cup with my lunch.

- how you learn it

To explain it further, I have read on the Internet that tea will not only help you slow down the process of aging but it can also make you feel awake all the time. At the beginning, this kind of habit makes me become sleepless sometimes, but you will gradually be addicted by this kind of drink afterwards

- when you do it

As for me, the best way to take a cup of tea is at 7 a.m and 1.30 p.m everyday. It is because you can refresh your mind and keep it awake during working hours without interrupting your daily routine. First of all, I think drinking two cups of tea everyday is affordable and it will not waste your time. You can drink it during breakfast or bring a bottle of tea nearby and use some whenever you like.

- and how you feel about the method

Moreover, drinking tea is one of our good traditional habit and it is extremely wonderful if our generation can understand and extend it. This is my method to restrain concentration.

I think for many of us choosing between high salary and job satisfaction is a difficult decision. Both are important but depending on you know your priorities and your situation, I think one might outweigh the other. Salary is definitely important because it provides financial security. It helps you know meet, uhh helps you pay your bills and also helps you support your family if you're planning to have one. Without a adequate salary, definitely a lot of stress can affect, a lot of stress can come in and it can affect your overall well-being. But job satisfaction is also very important because you're spending a really long part of your day at work like a 9-5 is a lot of hours and that being happy with what you do is important for your mental health and your emotional health. And this would affect the people around you. The joy you feel when you're at work affects people at home, other people around you. So for example, imagine having a high-paying job but it sucks to go to work everyday. Over time, the stress can build into a burnout and then health problems. But on the other hand, a job with a lower pay but high satisfaction, it feels like you're fulfilled and your life is more balanced I would say. So yeah well salary is important for stability, I think job satisfaction will lead to much healthier and more fulfilling life. But I think it is more about finding a balance between them. But for me, job satisfaction is definitely more important.

→ In my opinion, I believe that both are equally essential, depending on individual priorities and situations.

On the one hand, a high income can provide financial security. Indeed, a generous wage can allow individuals to pay their bills, such as housing, food, and healthcare, support their families, and alleviate stress that can impact their overall well-being.

On the other hand, job fulfillment is equally vital because one spends a significant portion of their day at work. Therefore, being content with their job is essential for their mental and emotional health, which in turn influences those around them. For example, if a high-paying job makes someone miserable every day, such a situation can lead to burnout and health issues over time. Conversely, a career with lower pay but high satisfaction can bring a sense of joy and balance to one's life. As a result, striking a balance between the two is key, but personally, I prioritize a fulfilling occupation.

- From my perspective, between salary and job satisfaction, job satisfaction is definitely more crucial for two main reasons.
 - Firstly, (lý do 1) >> Supporting / Example
 - Firstly, job FULFILLMENT directly impacts our well-being and mental health. When we are content with our job, it significantly contributes to our happiness and engagement. For instance, being satisfied with our work creates a positive environment, fosters better relationships with colleagues, and reduces stress levels.

- Có thể thêm so sánh => On the other hand, even with a high INCOME, if we are unhappy at work, our overall well-being can be compromised, leading to dissatisfaction in other areas of life.
- Secondly, (lý do 2) >> Supporting / Example
 - Secondly, job CONTENTMENT plays an essential role in long-term career success. When we derive satisfaction from our work, we are more likely to be motivated to improve our skills and actively seek growth opportunities. This continuous development enhances our expertise, expands our knowledge base, and increases our chances of professional advancement.
 - So sánh => In contrast, a high WAGE alone may not provide the same level of job security or personal growth. Without job satisfaction, individuals may become stagnant in their roles, limiting their potential for progress and career development.
 - Therefore, focusing on finding pleasure in our work should be a primary consideration when making career choices.

When I think of young people, I think of people between the age of 18 to 22... so university students like myself and I think one of the most popular jobs that I've seen people take is probably being waiters and waitresses. The reason why this is so popular is because at this certain age, you don't have that much working experience yet in the field that you want to be working at. You're still working..studying sorry, for a degree in order to apply for a job in the future. So, lots of students look for part-time jobs to make money on the side. And one of the easiest jobs you can get is being a waiter or a waitress. This is because you don't need that much working experience. It's mostly labour work, you're always using your strength to do things, and sometimes speaking if you're like in the cashier...sometimes it happens. But yeah, that is one of the most popular jobs that I think young people in Vietnam are taking. → chỗ chữ đỏ này 2 ý của mình lặp lại nhau nha mình chia ra 2 main idea rõ ràng để tránh nói lặp ý và không rõ bô cục nha

Young individuals, typically between 18 to 22 years old, such as university students like myself, often opt for prevalent careers such as working as waiters and waitresses.

To begin with, this popularity stems from the fact that at this age, individuals often lack extensive work experience in their desired fields and are primarily focused on pursuing their degrees for future job prospects. Therefore, as these roles only require physical labor for various tasks, many young adults seek to gain practical skills and earn money to support their education and future career goals.

Secondly, these positions allow youngsters to work freely at any time they want, as they don't need to follow a strict 9-5 schedule. This flexibility enables students to manage their time efficiently, accommodating their academic responsibilities while earning extra income.

Consequently, young individuals, like myself, can gain valuable work experience, financial independence, and a sense of responsibility while pursuing their educational aspirations

In terms of how people's ways of studying changed, I think there are lots of things that you can say but I would like to focus on digital studying. So yeah let's go back to before Covid where most of the studying was done in person. When students go to class, physically go to the class, and teachers go as well and they, you know sit on tables and they learn, they listen to the teacher and they learn and they do work in the class and then that's how studying was done. But then after Covid, during Covid sorry and after Covid, digital studying has boomed. It's blown up. And now, you see courses, University courses even are being available online which means that all the course's content is posted online and students do it on their own time. They look at the lectures, they read it on their own time and then they do assignments online. This way, teachers don't have to go to class, students also don't have to go to class but the content, the course is still being delivered just as well as in-person. And I think this is a really big change in the education system where in-person classes was used to be looked at as one of the most effective ways to deliver content but now digital studying, learning through Zoom meetings, learning through online studying, has also shown to be just as effective. So yeah, I think that's a really big change that has happened before and now after Covid.

→ câu này mình tham khảo sắp xếp lại ý, bỏ các chỗ lặp

The process of learning has undergone significant transformation over the years, particularly in the realm of digital education.

In the past, before the COVID-19 pandemic, education predominantly occurred in physical classrooms. Specifically, students attended classes in person, engaging with teachers and participating in class activities. This traditional approach was the norm until the outbreak of the pandemic.

However, in recent times, digital education has experienced a significant surge. Indeed, online platforms have flourished, with even university courses being offered virtually, allowing students to engage with lectures and assignments at their convenience. This transition has eliminated the need for physical attendance in class for both teachers and students, yet the delivery of course material has remained effective. Consequently, this transformation represents a significant shift in the education sector, where traditional in-person classes now coexist with equally efficient digital learning methods like Zoom meetings and online studying.

• Câu hỏi về sự thay đổi sẽ chia thành như sau để triển khai

- In the past, studying primarily revolved around books, physical libraries, and face-to-face interactions in classrooms.

As books were the main source of information, students would spend hours reading and studying from textbooks.

Additionally, students would attend lectures, participate in discussions, and engage directly with instructors and peers

>> Có thể nêu thêm cảm nghĩ của mình về cách học này

- Now, people rely heavily on digital resources accessed through smartphones, tablets, and computers. Specifically, online platforms provide instant access to a vast range of educational content, such as e-books, videos, and interactive materials. Moreover, distance education and online courses have gained popularity, offering flexible learning options. This enables individuals with geographical barriers or time constraints to pursue their educational goals more easily.
