Elastomeric sealants are bonding compounds that are used to finish, protect, and seal surfaces. When applied to a fracture or space, they expand and seal the surface, creating a waterproof barrier. When stress is applied to a material, it has the power to stretch the material and then return to its original shape and size when the stress is removed. Elastomeric sealants have enhanced moisture and water management capabilities. Steel, cladding, windows, glass, roads, bridges, stones, metal, concrete, wood, and other surfaces are all sealed with an elastomeric sealant. Elastomeric sealants are tough and easy to work with thanks to their elastic nature, which dries quickly and keeps the material flexible.
