  - o T/N: 气劲 literally translates to "breath/qi strength" and appears to be effectively synonymous with 内气 "internal qi." However, since musuli didn't use 内气 and made up her own term, I'm treating this "impetus" as a derived material noun related to the actual meaning of the word "impetus" but not literally "impetus" in its conventional sense.

- 灵识 spiritas, 灵神 spiriteos, 灵魄 spiritum
  - T/N: 魄 in Daoism refers to the mortal soul that remains in the body after death and does not follow through reincarnations, but in shangxian 灵魄 does follow the soul through reincarnation. I made up words for these three terms (although 灵识 is a fairly common word meaning awareness/consciousness and 灵神 is often translated "divine spirit") because in context it's important that 灵识 and 灵魄 share a prefix, and keeping them in pinyin would be too ambiguous (there are a lot of different words "lingshi" can refer to). Moreover, 灵识 and 灵神 are often used interchangeably in the text so I decided to make their translations similar. All of these words are the same in both singular and plural forms.
