- create video book trailers for the book they read or interview someone about the book (flip grid is a great resource for the video)
- tweet the authors and tag @myonreader and send the authors questions
- Black out poetry, Take an existing text (page from book, online article). Black out words and lines until a few carefully selected words are left, leaving behind beautiful poetry. https://ditchthattextbook.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/05/blackout-poetry-template.pptx
- create a board game based on the characters and plot of the book
- battle of the books (virtually, they'd need to use a list of books they pre-determined first)
- create a drawing or costume based on a character.
- If there is a maker space; items like Makey Makey's or electronic gadgets the students could create book talks on code.org
    - use the gadgets to speak when they touch the marker on the shelf Have
- "book tastings" in the schools or online with myon books in the library. A book tasting involves everyone sampling various books from different genres and reading a selection for 5 minutes or so and then rating the books.
    - a menu of books can be created - this would be great with myon book bundles
- Play snapchat games, "Would You Rather," "This or That," and "My Face When," (click the links to download interactive powerpoints)
- Make infographics in PowerPoint https://youtu.be/RmO5eEWnYh4
- Instagram story in PowerPoint https://ditchthattextbook.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/08/Instagram-Stories-template.pptx

- Brainstorm and reading responses on virtual sticky notes: https://ditchthattextbook.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/05/Tweet-for-someone-template.pptx
- Annotate an image from a book, https://ditchthattextbook.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/08/Template-Annotate-an-Image.pptx
- Make vocabulary come alive in PowerPoint,
    - Turn vocabulary lists into an engaging, meaningful learning activity with slides and images. By inserting images students can illustrate their vocabulary lists with beautiful Creative Commons images. Connections in the brain with new words are stronger if they're paired with an image. Those presentations can be displayed for class or saved for personal study.
- BLOG
    - Blogging is a useful reflective activity that can generate a lot of online conversation among students. A quick, simple version of blogging can be created in a Google presentation. Create a shared presentation, and have students write a short "blog post" in their slide. They can even add images. When complete, students can read each other's writing and write comments on them using the comment button in the toolbar. Conversations stay grouped together when students reply to each other using the "reply" button. This creates a meaningful conversation with very little prep time.
- Geocaching with Google Earth or creating a virtual tour of the places each character goes…
- Caption This in PowerPoint, https://ditchthattextbook.com/wp-content/uploads/2020/08/Template-Caption-This-1.pptx
- Create a PDF ebook
    - PDF files are about as universal as it gets. You can open them on almost any Internet-ready device. They're read-only, so publishing a PDF is a good way to distribute information to be consumed by reading. PowerPoint is a great, simple PDF ebook creation tool. Create a slide presentation, change it to the dimensions you prefer, add content and finalize by going to File > Save as ... > File format PDF Document.
