

Economics

Huh? Yes, you read that correctly, He is a psychologist whose work on human behavior led to a Nobel Prize in Economics. To really harshly summarize, his work showed that human beings are actually incapable of behaving as rational agents that most economic theories were previously based on. He basically founded behavioral economics.