

For Pre-K:

To boost imagination and creativity, we will put on weekly mini-performances (about 5 minutes) based around a storybook or short story we have read. We will read the story together, and then break it into scenes and characters. Then, we will dress up as a character and somewhat improvise the scene, keeping in mind the structure we have already discussed. Along with this larger skit project, we will listen to and sing songs from children's theater and play fun improvisation games to improve our ability to think quickly and creatively.

For K-1:

To boost imagination and creativity, we will put on weekly mini-performances (about 5-10 minutes) based around a book or short story we have read. We will read the story together, and then break it into scenes and characters. We will work together to plan how each scene will work, what points we have to hit in each scene, and rehearse. Then, we will make necessary props or simple costumes (think hand puppets), dress up as a character and somewhat improvise the scene, keeping in mind the structure we have already discussed. Along with this larger skit project, we will listen to and sing songs from children's theater and play fun improvisation games to improve our ability to think quickly and creatively, and improve our projection and enunciation techniques.
