

Chase those idiots

Good Evening, listeners! This is The Reverend and professor Mike Litoris of The Media Virus Podcast, bringing you the latest updates. In today's top story, a viral glitch at Chase Bank has caused quite a stir among customers. Let's dive into the details.

Over the weekend, while I was trying to bleach my anal ring, a viral trend on TikTok led many to believe they could exploit a so-called "glitch" in Chase Bank's ATM system to get free money. While I had one foot up on the tub trying to aim a handheld mirror so I could see my starfish in the wall mirror, Bank users were depositing fraudulent checks and withdrawing funds before the checks bounced. However, Chase Bank has swiftly addressed the issue, clarifying that this is not a glitch but a form of check fraud.

As I delicately applied the bleach I heard a spokesperson for Chase state, "Regardless of what you see online, depositing a fraudulent check and withdrawing the funds from your account is fraud, plain and simple"<sup>1</sup>. The bank has taken measures to lock accounts involved in this activity and has issued warnings to customers<sup>2</sup>.

That's right, folks. What seemed like a quick way to make some cash has serious legal consequences. Chase Bank has reiterated that such actions are illegal and will result in negative balances and potential legal action<sup>3</sup>.

As of now, I have successfully changed my ringtone, and Chase has resolved the issue and is monitoring for any further attempts to exploit their systems. They urge all customers to avoid participating in such schemes and to report any suspicious activity immediately<sup>4</sup>.

Stay tuned for more updates on this developing story. And remember, if it sounds too good to be true, it probably is. This is The reverend and professor Mike litoris, signing off. Stay safe, stay informed, and stay stain free

Not so WELLS, FARGOne for days

Good Evening, listeners. This is your breaking news update.

In a shocking turn of events, a Wells Fargo employee was discovered deceased at her workstation, days after clocking in. Denise Prudhomme, a 60-year-old worker at the Tempe, Arizona branch, was found in her cubicle on August 20th, four days after she had last clocked in.

The grim discovery was made by security personnel after a foul odor was noticed in the building. Surprisingly, some employees had attributed the smell to plumbing issues, But other employees were heard saying “I think Denise farted, she smells like that sometimes” unaware of the tragic situation unfolding. Authorities have launched an investigation, but preliminary reports indicate no signs of foul play or child's play or foreplay. The Maricopa County medical examiner is yet to determine the cause of death, but they are sure it was something.

Wells Fargo has expressed deep sadness over the loss of their colleague and assured that counseling services are available at personal expense for affected employees. The company emphasized its commitment to workforce safety and would prefer if people didn't die there.

This incident has sparked a heated debate on social media about workplace culture and employee well-being. Many are questioning how such a situation could go unnoticed for days in a modern office environment. Like when i shit in the ficus plant.

As this story continues to develop, it serves as a stark reminder of the importance of workplace awareness of possible dead people and the need for robust systems to ensure employees die at home.

Stay tuned for further updates on this developing story. This is The reverend and professor Mike litoris, reporting for TMVP NEWS

The Schuylkill is for Lovers

Good afternoon, listeners! We've got a wild story coming out of Philadelphia today that you won't believe. Early Wednesday morning, a couple found themselves in quite the predicament when their SUV ended up in the Schuylkill River. And no, they weren't sightseeing!

According to police reports, the pair were “taking the skin boat to tuna town” in the backseat of their parked vehicle by the riverside. Things took a turn when the ditsy broad accidentally disengaged the car from park, sending it rolling into the water. After he finished, they both managed to swim to safety, but their SUV wasn't so lucky. It took crews until 9 AM to fully remove the vehicle from the river. When the man was asked why they were making love by the Schuylkill River he responded “It's the only thing that covers the smell”

This incident marks the second time this month a car has been found in the Schuylkill River. Just two weeks ago, another vehicle was discovered, though no occupants were found, but TMVP theorizes it was probably the same chic. Stay tuned for more quirky news stories, and remember, folks, always keep your car in park!

 Good evening, listeners! This is your celebrity news update, bringing you the latest on the Hollywood rollercoaster that is Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck's relationship.

In today's story, Jennifer Lopez and Ben Affleck, the iconic duo who rekindled their romance in 2021, are once again making headlines, but this time for their split. After tying the knot in a spontaneous Las Vegas ceremony in 2022, the couple has decided to part ways. Sources close to the stars reveal that Jennifer Lopez is having a tough time, describing this as the "worst year of her life"<sup>1</sup>. Despite the heartbreak, she remains surrounded by family and friends, trying to maintain a positive outlook<sup>2</sup>.

On the other hand, Ben Affleck is reportedly focusing on the positives and slowly moving into his new home<sup>2</sup>. The split has been challenging, but both stars are determined to move forward. The lack of a prenuptial agreement could make the divorce proceedings quite messy, with financial disputes potentially on the horizon<sup>3</sup>.

Stay tuned for more updates as this story develops. For now, we wish both Jennifer and Ben the best as they navigate this difficult time. This has been your celebrity news update. I'm The Reverend and professor Mike Litoris signing off.

 Good evening, listeners! This is your celebrity news update, bringing you the latest on the ever-vibrant Lizzo.

In another story, Lizzo is once again in the spotlight, but this time for a mix of personal triumph and ongoing legal battles. The Grammy-winning artist recently shared stunning photos showcasing her weight loss journey, donning a red bikini that has the internet buzzing with positivity<sup>12</sup>. Fans are celebrating her transformation and applauding her confidence.

However, it's not all smooth sailing for the "Truth Hurts" singer. Lizzo is currently facing a legal challenge as a judge has denied her request to dismiss a lawsuit filed by three former dancers. The lawsuit alleges sexual harassment and a hostile work environment<sup>34</sup>. Lizzo's team has described the allegations as a "fabricated sob story" and plans to appeal the decision<sup>5</sup>.

Stay tuned for more updates as this story unfolds.

B Block

In a shocking story, an Austrian neurosurgeon is under criminal investigation after allegedly allowing her 13-year-old daughter to drill a hole in a patient's skull during a surgical procedure<sup>12</sup>. The incident occurred at Graz University Hospital, where a 33-year-old man, injured in a forestry accident, required emergency surgery<sup>3</sup>.

According to reports, the surgeon's daughter was permitted to assist in the operation, even using a drill on the patient's skull<sup>4</sup>. The patient, who was unaware of this at the time, only learned about the incident through media reports months later<sup>5</sup>. The hospital has since fired the surgeon and another specialist involved, and five other staff members are under investigation<sup>4</sup>.

The patient's lawyer has expressed outrage, stating that the patient was treated like a "guinea pig" and has yet to receive an apology or explanation from the hospital<sup>5</sup>. This incident has sparked widespread condemnation and raised serious questions about hospital protocols and patient safety.

Stay tuned for more updates as this story develops. This has been your breaking news update. I'm Matty Rockdef, and we'll be back with more after these jokes

 Good evening, listeners! This is your quirky news update, bringing you a story that's sure to make you chuckle.

In today's top story, a DoorDash driver recently took to TikTok to share one of her most awkward delivery experiences. The driver, Aylin Rahman, recounted an order from a customer named "Rob," who requested an adult toy from CVS on a Wednesday evening<sup>1</sup>. Aylin humorously noted that "Rob" looked like the golden bachelor, around 70 years old, and questioned why such items are even sold on DoorDash<sup>1</sup>.

The situation escalated when the item was out of stock, forcing Aylin to contact Rob for a replacement or refund. Despite her hopes to avoid a face-to-face encounter, Rob was waiting outside when she arrived<sup>1</sup>. The TikTok video has since gone viral, sparking a mix of laughter and debate among viewers<sup>1</sup>.

Stay tuned for more quirky updates as we continue to bring you the most entertaining stories from around the web. This has been your quirky news update. I'm [Your Name], and we'll be back with more after the break.

The World Health Organization (WHO) has issued a warning about a significant decline in condom use among Gen Z, which is raising concerns about potential health risks.

According to the report, nearly a third of 15-year-olds reported not using any form of contraception the last time they were sexually active<sup>1</sup>. This trend is expected to lead to higher rates of sexually transmitted infections \(STIs\) and unintended pregnancies<sup>1</sup>.

The decline in condom use has been attributed to several factors, including a lack of comprehensive sexual education and limited access to contraceptive methods<sup>1</sup>. The WHO emphasizes the urgent need for improved sexual education to address this issue and prevent the associated health risks<sup>1</sup>.

[Radio News Jingle]

Anchor: Good evening, listeners! This is your favorite news station bringing you the latest and most inspiring stories from around the globe. I'm your host, and today we have a truly remarkable tale from the world of sports.

Anchor: In a stunning display of determination and skill, Matt Stutzman, known as the "Armless Archer," has once again made headlines. Competing in the Paris Paralympics, Stutzman clinched the gold medal in the men's individual compound archery competition. This victory marks a significant milestone, as he becomes the first armless competitor to win gold in this event<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: Stutzman, who was born without arms, has been a trailblazer in the sport of archery. His journey began in 2008, and since then, he has inspired countless individuals with his incredible achievements. Not only did he win silver at the 2012 London Games, but his recent triumph in Paris has solidified his legacy as a true champion<sup>2</sup>.

Anchor: But the story doesn't end there. Stutzman's influence has paved the way for other armless archers, including India's Sheetal Devi. Devi, who hails from Jammu and Kashmir, has quickly risen to prominence in the archery world. Her participation in the 2023 World Archery Para Championships and her meeting with Stutzman have been pivotal moments in her career<sup>3</sup>.

Anchor: Stutzman expressed his joy at seeing more armless archers compete, stating, "It proves anybody can shoot a bow. You don't need arms to do that. Bows just want to be shot." His mentorship and support for athletes like Devi highlight his commitment to growing the sport and inspiring future generations<sup>4</sup>.

Anchor: As we celebrate these incredible achievements, let's remember the power of perseverance and the impact of trailblazers like Matt Stutzman. Stay tuned for more uplifting stories and updates from the world of sports. This is your host, signing off. Have a great evening

<sup>1</sup>: NBC Insider <sup>2</sup>: Indian Express <sup>3</sup>: Paralympic.org <sup>4</sup>: NBC Insider

C Block

[Radio News Jingle]

Anchor: Good evening, listeners! This is your favorite news station, bringing you the latest updates from the world of business and employment. I'm your host, and today we have a significant policy change from one of the largest retailers in the United States.

Anchor: Home Depot has announced that it will stop testing workers for marijuana and limit drug screening for most employees. This change, set to take effect on September 1st, was revealed in an internal memo obtained by Marijuana Moment<sup>1</sup>. The memo states that marijuana will be removed from all drug panels, including tests following workplace accidents and in cases where there's reasonable suspicion of impairment<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: This policy shift means that pre-employment drug testing will only be conducted for external candidates with contingent offers in Asset Protection and Corporate Security. Employees regulated through the federal Department of Transportation will still be subject to drug testing<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: Home Depot, which employs over 400,000 associates across more than 2,000 stores in the U.S., is one of the largest private companies to make this move. The decision aligns with the growing trend of companies reevaluating their drug testing policies in light of changing cannabis laws and societal attitudes<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: The company stated that it continually evaluates its policies to remain competitive while complying with local, state, and federal laws. This change is expected to have a significant impact on the hiring process and workplace environment at Home Depot<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: That's all for now. Stay tuned for more updates and stories that matter to you. This is your host, signing off. Have a great evening!

[Radio News Jingle]

<sup>1</sup>: Marijuana Moment

[Radio News Jingle]

Anchor: Good evening, listeners! This is your favorite news station, bringing you the latest insights from the world of technology and human behavior. I'm your host, and today we have a fascinating study that sheds new light on the relationship between intelligence and computer proficiency.

Anchor: Researchers from Aalto University and the University of Helsinki have discovered that a person's intelligence significantly limits their computer proficiency more than previously thought. Published in the International Journal of Human-Computer Studies, the study reveals that general cognitive abilities, such as perception, thinking, and remembering, play a crucial role in predicting one's ability to complete common tasks on a PC<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: The study involved participants from various age groups who were given 18 different tasks, including software installation, navigation, and use of spreadsheets. The findings showed that cognitive abilities have a significant, independent, and wide-ranging effect on people's ability to use a computer. This challenges the previous notion that experience alone is enough to master computer tasks<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: Professor Antti Oulasvirta, who led the study, emphasized the implications for digital equality. He stated, "Everyday user interfaces have become too complex to use, and practice alone is no longer enough. We need to streamline user interfaces to promote a deeper and more equal use of computers in society<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: This groundbreaking research highlights the importance of designing simpler and more accessible user interfaces to bridge the digital divide. As we move forward, it's clear that both cognitive abilities and user-friendly design will be key to ensuring everyone can effectively use technology<sup>1</sup>.

Anchor: That's all for now. Stay tuned for more intriguing stories and updates. This is your host, signing off. Have a great evening!

[Radio News Jingle]

<sup>1</sup>: TechXplore

#Philadelphia #SchuylkillRiver #CarAccident #CoupleGoals #UnusualNews #StaySafe
#BreakingNews #NewsUpdate #RadioNews #TooFab

Hashtags for this story could include: #WellsFargo, #WorkplaceSafety, #EmployeeWellbeing, #CorporateCulture

Citations:

[1] <https://theshaderoom.com/wells-fargo-employee-death-denise-prudhomme-cubicle/>