

SL: The CURSE of Transformers (>_<)

PV: After reading this <Firstname> will ...

Good morning ☀️

From the GIF above, two things might surprise <First Name>

1. A fire-breathing Robot Dinosaur, of course
2. The “scenic location” being burned by said dinosaur

We usually focus only on the movie’s plot, but we often ignore the incredible environments that bring them to life.

Some people even say:

- "It’s probably just a CGI-made place, right?" 🙄

Well then, let us introduce you to 5 stunning places in China that brought some of the world’s top movies to life:

The Natural Three Bridges: Located 231m above the ground,
This is the world's largest natural bridge—so massive that even Autobots look like mice in comparison.

Longshuixia Gorge: Featured in the 2006 film Curse of the Golden Flower, in the scene with the hired assassins.

Furong Cave: The main setting for the final installment of The Mummy series

(The Mummy: Tomb of the Dragon Emperor).

Huangya Cave: Home to 2,300-year-old glowing buildings,
This cave inspired the bathhouse in the 2001 anime Spirited Away.

The Bai Palace: The actual residence of China's last emperor, and featured in the 1987 film The Last Emperor.

If you want to go on a movie-like adventure, click this link:

JOINME.MN

Open: 8397

CTR: 3% /522 people clicked/