ABSTRACT

The abstract may be written in either British or American English, as long as consistency is maintained throughout the text. It should provide a clear and concise summary of the study, covering the research objectives, methodology, key findings, and main conclusions. For Engloria: Journal of English Language and Applied Linguistics, the abstract must be 150–200 words in length, formatted in Calisto MT 10 pt, and should not contain any references or citations. Since the abstract will be indexed and searchable, authors are encouraged to include relevant keywords to improve visibility among researchers. Where appropriate, incorporate specific data to demonstrate the scientific rigor of the study and to strengthen the credibility of the results. Overall, the abstract should be written in a precise, coherent, and focused manner to effectively communicate the essential contributions of the paper.

INTRODUCTION (Upper Case, Calisto MT, Bold, 11 pt)

The introduction section serves as a critical foundation for the manuscript, positioning the study within the broader scholarly discourse and aligning with internationally recognized standards, including those expected in Scopus-indexed publications. Authors are expected to present a well-structured and coherent background of the research topic, clearly articulating the context and relevance of the study. This section should explicitly define the research problem, identify significant gaps or limitations in existing literature, and demonstrate how the present study addresses these gaps. In addition, authors should outline the research objectives, questions, and underlying motivations, while emphasizing the theoretical and practical significance of the work. A strong engagement with recent and relevant scholarly sources is essential to establish a solid theoretical framework and to reflect current developments in the field. The introduction should also highlight the novelty, originality, and potential contribution of the study to academic knowledge and professional practice. Subheadings may be used where necessary (Sub-title 1: Capitalized First Letter, Calisto MT, Bold Italic, 11 pt; Sub-title 2: Capitalized First Letter, Calisto MT, Italic, 11 pt) to enhance clarity and organization.

The manuscript should be prepared within a length of 3000–8000 words, including the abstract, tables, figures, and references, using Calisto MT font (11 pt), single spacing, and A4 page format. All citations must adhere to the APA 7th Edition style, incorporating the author-date system (e.g., Author, 2023). Authors are strongly encouraged to utilize reference management software such as Mendeley or Zotero to ensure accuracy and consistency. Adherence to these academic writing conventions reflects the rigor, clarity, and scholarly quality required for international publication standards.

METHODS

This section should clearly describe the sources of data and the context in which the study is conducted, along with a systematic explanation of the data analysis procedures. Authors are expected to provide sufficient methodological detail to allow the study to be replicated by other researchers. When established or previously published methods are employed, appropriate citations must be included, and only essential modifications should be explicitly outlined.

FINDINGS AND DISCUSSION (can be combined/separated)

In the Findings section, authors are expected to present the outcomes of the study in a clear and systematic manner, supported where appropriate by visual elements such as tables, figures, or graphs. The narrative should concisely highlight the principal results without extending into interpretation or explanatory commentary. Analytical interpretation and critical reflection should be reserved for the subsequent section.

In the Discussion section, the emphasis should be placed on interpreting the key results and articulating their significance within the context of existing scholarship. Authors are encouraged to engage with relevant literature to demonstrate how the findings confirm, extend, or challenge prior studies, while also drawing attention to any original contributions or emerging insights. Redundancy with the Findings section should be avoided. In some cases, integrating both sections into a unified Findings and Discussion may be appropriate, provided that the distinction between presentation and interpretation remains clear. Additionally, all cited works mentioned in the manuscript must be accurately included in the References section, and any uncited entries should be removed to ensure consistency and academic integrity.

Sub-title 1 (if any)

Sub-title 2 (if any)

For tables, the title should be formatted in 10 pt font, while the table content should use 11 pt font. Tables must be numbered sequentially throughout the manuscript, and each title should be positioned above the corresponding table (see Table 1 for illustration).

Table 1. Capitalized First Letter

Construct	Mean	SD	Min	Max
Perception	3.11	0.37	1.67	3.83
Difficulty	2.70	0.27	2.00	3.33
Strategy	3.13	0.33	2.29	3.86

As for Figures, employ a 10 pt for the title and, if applicable, an 11 pt for the content. Number the figures consecutively throughout your paper, positioning the title below the figure (refer to Figure 1 as an example).

CONCLUSION

The conclusion section should succinctly synthesize the principal findings of the study while highlighting their broader theoretical and practical implications. Authors are expected to articulate the overall contribution of the research to the field, without merely repeating earlier sections. In addition, it is important to acknowledge the limitations of the study and to propose well-founded recommendations for future research that may extend or refine the current work.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS (if any)

Authors are encouraged to formally recognize and express their gratitude to funding bodies, institutions, or departments that have provided support or contributed to the completion of the study.

REFERENCES

Authors are strongly advised to carefully verify the accuracy and completeness of all in-text citations and reference entries within the manuscript. Submissions containing more than five missing references or significant citation inconsistencies may be subject to rejection.

All references must follow the APA 7th Edition style, using the surname of the contributor and the year of publication in the citation format (e.g., Contributor, 2023). Every source listed in the reference list must be cited in the main text, arranged systematically, and presented in proper sequence. To ensure consistency and accuracy, the use of reference management tools such as Mendeley, Zotero, or similar applications is highly recommended.

Examples of citation formats include journal articles (Samsudin, 2019; Samsudin & Sukarismanti, 2023), conference proceedings (Rasmin et al., 2024), books (Samsudin, 2025), online sources (Smith, 2021), and theses or dissertations (Johnson, 2020).
