What Are The Causes Of Migraines

What are migraines?

Those who never had headaches can't understand the absolute torture endured by those who suffer from migraines attacks. And there are many repercussions to be added to the suffering!

Migraines are pathologies. They are extremely underestimated for the simple reason that the pain it brings cannot be seen and that it is considered - most of the time - to be minor while it can generate severe and unending suffering. Many people suffer from migraines on a regular basis.

Modern medicine does not understand the cause of migraines!

Migraines remain a mystery for science and medicine. Scientists are always embarrassed when they are asked to explain the real causes.

Modern medicine is not able to explain the reason for this painful headaches, are they a full-fledged illness? Mere symptoms among many others? Do migraines have a psychological component or cause? Are they hereditary?

These questions and many others can't be answered from a scientific or medical perspective. When someone suffers from migraines, pharmacists or physicians hasten to counsel or prescribe analgesics (painkillers).

A vague definition for an unknown condition

The difficulty of understanding migraines can be found usually written in scientific dictionaries, which find it hard to define what migraines are.

Migraines are generally defined as forms of headaches (?) (this definition is strangely vague) that can manifest themselves through periodical attacks.

In fact, having a migraine is not only extremely trying but migraines usually return - sometimes very regularly - in spite of the paracetamol-based medications or medications using other chemical substances.

Migraines are not just symptoms!

The best proof that migraines are not merely symptoms, or in other words, the result of any other disorder, specifically lies in the fact that current medications are incapable of overcoming it!

In fact, if a migraine were an illness, those who suffer from it should get rid of it by taking medication.

Yet, as specified above, migraines usually manifest themselves through attacks, which means they come back - usually periodically - and torment the people suffering from them. Most often, they come on suddenly, within a few minutes.

Ineffective medication

Many studies have long shown that chemical substances such as paracetamol are extremely useful to suppress the pain.

So, if paracetamol is used as a migraine relief when you have one and if the pain connected to migraines later resurfaces, this means there are reasons behind the outbreak of your migraines and that the chemical medication prescribed has not treated the exact cause!

Therefore, if the remedy based on aspirin, paracetamol or something else does not completely eliminate migraine symptoms but simply relieves the pain for a moment, it means it is either ineffective or that migraines are not illnesses but the consequence of another disorder that has not been neutralized by the chemical substances.
