Allergic Reaction to Bee Stings

Dear Parent/Guardian,

Reactions to a bee sting may vary with each person. The majority of people stung by a bee will get a reaction consisting of redness, itching, swelling, burning pain and warmth over the area of the sting, which may last a few hours. However, a more severe reaction may result from multiple stings, or to persons having an allergy to bee stings. An allergic reaction can be severe and even fatal. You have indicated that your child has a bee sting allergy. I am trying to update your child's health records. Please answer the questions below, so that your child can get the best possible care if he/she gets stung by a bee:

When was the last time that your child was stung? _____

What kind of reaction occurred? _____

Was the reaction immediate? _____

Was medical attention required? _____

What type of treatment was received? _____

If your child will require medication when stung by a bee, please complete the attached self-administration form (Doctor, parent and student signature required.) If he/she does not need immediate medication, please indicate below what precautions need to be taken, if any, and if you would like to be notified by the school if a bee sting occurs: _____
