One day I had my best friend come over. Her name was Poppy. We went Sledding. It was very fun. We went down the biggest hill in my backyard. My friend and I went down the hill in a sledd. My heart was pounding. I could feel my friends heart pounding through her T-Shirt and her winter coat. We were so scared. We were racing and racing and racing and racing down the hill until……POW, WHOOSH, BAM, YIKES, CRACKLE, BANG, we headed right into a tree and some bushes.

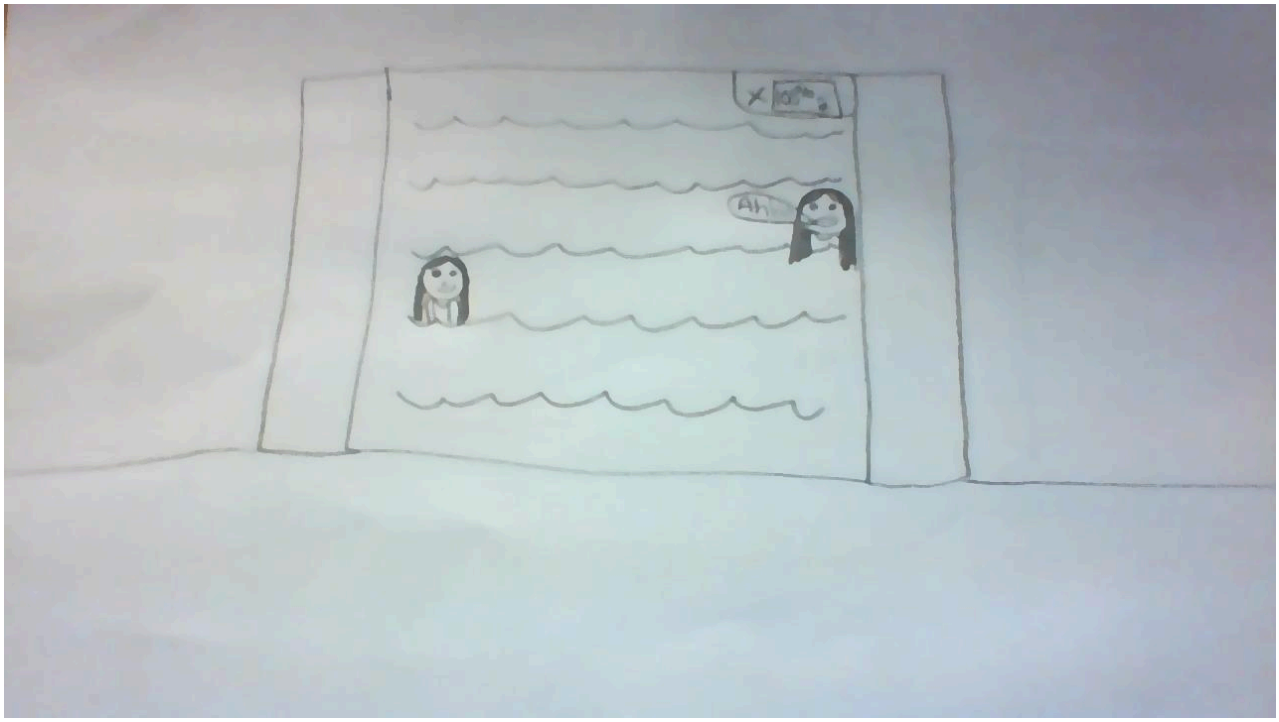

The first thing that I said I can remember it until this day is “Poppy are you okay.” She said yes and I was relieved. We had scratches all over our face from the branches on the low part of the tree, it felt like a lion gashing us in the face 20 million times. And even worse we had pine needles in our mouths and we were half on and half off of the sledd. But we got up and we just looked at each other. Then a few minutes or seconds later, We both yelled,”That was awesome!!!!”

But since we were covered in nature like the pine needles and the tree bark and we had scratches on our face, we decided that it would be better if we just went inside and had some hot chocolate. So we went inside, we got our wet things off, I got some hot water. Poppy got the tub of hot chocolate mix, we got the mugs and we poured hot cocoa, it smelled so good. And it felt so warm on our cold cold freezing little hands.

Then I thought of something!! We should go in my hot tub. I knew that the hot tub felt really really warm water like a bathtub water, so I convinced poppy. So after we finished our hot cocoa, we got bathing suits on and went into the hot tub. It was really fun. We did challenges like get out of the hot tub and then run in the snow or to a certain tree and then we had to go all the way back into the hot tub. It was a lot of fun.

“I really hope we can do this another time.” I said Poppy.
“Yes we should really do this another time.”

Best Friends Forever
#BFF’s!!