Hello, I am Hannah.

It is my position that students should not get paid to go to school because they could lose focus on their work. They could get an F and at the end of the school week still get $10.

My first point is that students could lose focus and just think about the money. According to the Educationalot website, if you start to pay students when they are younger and then stop when they are older, they are likely to do worse on their tests, studies and school work.

Secondly, proven from an article called "Should you pay your children for good grades", if you do pay your children, they will start to brag about it. They could easily say, "The music teacher gave me $10 and I bought mint ice cream" or claim "The teacher gave me $5 and I bought toys." It could lead to jealousy, bullying and fights.

Additionally, the website Educationalot states that education IS the reward. Children don't need money, they need an education so in their adult lives they are skilled and knowledgeable enough to make money.

Therefore, I am sure you will agree that children should not get paid to go to school.
