PSYCHOLOGICAL PROFILE

Sadie isn't the nicest person, and is usually always pretty grumpy about something. The girl is always very reserved, and doesn't easily open up, but if you get close enough to her, she's actually pretty soft and sensitive. She unintentionally hurts people emotionally, and lashes out if you provoke her enough (what a spitfire!!) Sadie sometimes exhibits narcissistic/selfish traits, which hinders her ability to work with others cooperatively. She does tend to try and make it up though, as she apologizes by leaving gifts with a small apology attached to it. Sadie has an attitude with almost everyone, except for her friends and higher ups, as she doesn't want to be punished/terminated.

ADOLESCENCE

Born in Fuzhou, China in 1997, Sadie grew up in a dysfunctional, but relatively loving household, with her parents and older brother. She grew up within lots of yelling, screaming matches, and sometimes physical @buse, but her parents had tried to keep themselves together for the sake of their family. They went on multiple trips, and they had fun. Sadie was always interested in science and cryptids/paranormal activity. She would always read/watch information about the things, and would always be at the top 1% of her classes to get into a good highschool/college. In middle school, she encountered her first anomalous entity/paranormal object. It was 7th grade, and she had snuck out of her house with her friends to go to the infamous rumored haunted house. It was an old house, supposedly being built in the 1800's with many murder&disappearances happening in that house. She had wandered off in the massive house, and met a ghost. A real life ghost as she described it with her friends. It had been aggressive with her, and tried to "kill" her, she said, during lunch at school. In her highschool years, she'd always be busy studying and whatnot, never going out to party with her friends or just having a "highschool sweetheart". Fast forward to the nearing of the end of her senior year in highschool. Sadie graduated at the top of her highschool, being named valedictorian and went on to study in Yale. She went back to that house, exploring it one more time. During her time there, she was alone and at mercy to the being before her, Sadie trying her best to hide as she went deeper into the house, fixated on how the real world and the after-world could crossover, fascinating her. She didn't stay for too long though, as she accidentally set off an alarm and attracted the attention of many.. hostile entities. Sadie booked it out of there, not planning to end up dead somewhere in the house and becoming one of them. After her college acceptance, she quickly moved to America, not wanting the being she disturbed to find her at her house.

PRE-FOUNDATION ADULthood

Once she had moved to America, she took up a part-time job at Starbucks to pay for it, as she didn't have a full scholarship, but was granted most of the money. Sadie, again, never went out. If she was not at work, she was studying. If she wasn't studying, she'd be working. She was always wondering why people would waste their free time on silly stuff such as partying; It never made sense to her. She always made sure to score the highest in class, and majored in Psychology, minoring in Parapsychology. It always interested her, as she loved getting the information. During her time at college, she had interned at many local psychology offices.

RECRUITMENT TO PRESENT

She graduated valedictorian of Yale and once she was out of college, she did her residency for 4 years at a local psychologist office before moving away and being hired at a very well-known, infamous psychologist office, though she wasn't really noticed by the Foundation until it was revealed that she had been testing a bit on her clients in her 2nd year of being a full time psychologist, always wanting to know more. Why humans acted the way they did, or, more importantly, what kind of conditions a human had to be sustained into exhibiting anomalous/odd behavior. Sadie was also mildly performing experiments on her clients, as she was interested on seeing how much psychological torture the human mind could tolerate before breaking. When she was 26, she was recruited into the Foundation after they had noticed her experiments, having detected faint anomalous frequencies from her office/DIY lab, and she's now been working for 2 years there.

Sadie sighed as she put away her notebook for the day, having been drained of all energy from dealing with many people who she considered idiots, but never would admit it. She had already retired for the day, relaxing and having been changed into more comfortable PJs, laid down in her bed and scrolled aimlessly on her phone, almost desperate to find something or someone at least mildly interesting. She was never really into politics, or any sort of that matter, so they even bother with elections and political news? Sadie adjusted her position, logging into a popular chatting website and starting to talk to other people, who shared the same interests as her.

Sades: “Hey, Gaby, are you up?”

Gaby_3322: “Sadie.. it’s so late.. why are you up??”

She sighed, closing her phone and deciding to take some meds, taking a big gulp of water as well before lying down and promptly curling up into a ball under the comforters before falling asleep, her sleep deprivation getting the better of her as she drifted off.
