

- [1] National Convention of the Socialist Party, "Majority Report of Women's Committee," 17 May 1908, William R. Perkins Library, Duke University (Socialist Party of America Papers microfilm, reel 76), 301-06, Women and Social Movements in the United States, 1600-1800 (Record ID: 1000688857).
- [2] Theresa Malkiel, "Where Do We Stand on the Woman Question?," International Socialist Review (1909): 159-62.
- [3] Sally M. Miller, "Women in the Party Bureaucracy: Subservient Functionaries," Race, Ethnicity, and Gender in Early Twentieth-century American Socialism (New York: Garland, 1996), 106.
- [4] Ibid., 103.
- [5] "Women Socialists Rebuff Suffragists," New York Times, December 20, 1909, 5.
- [6] "Socialist Women and the Shirtwaist Makers' Strike," New York Call, February 8, 1910, 6.
- [7] John D. Buenker, "The Politics of Mutual Frustration: Socialists and Suffragists in New York and Wisconsin," Flawed Liberation: Socialism and Feminism, ed. Sally M. Miller (Westport, Conn.: Greenwood, 1981), 114.

----

- [1] Sally L. Kitch, This Strange Society of Women: Reading the Letters and Lives of the Woman's Commonwealth (Columbus: Ohio University Press, 1979), 8.
- [2] Ibid., 41.
- [3] Ibid., 108.
- [4] Ibid., 113.