The benefits of having a job that requires a lot of travel

Krystal

When you get a job that makes you have to move a lot, your life could be more adventurous than others'. First, you can have a chance to be friends with people from various regions. It is exciting to know people who are not in my regions because they can share current issues related to their regions that they are interested in. For example, I have a friend who is from Thailand, and she is eager to know Korean cultures, especially about dramas. I can recommend her some dramas that are really popular in Korea before her friends get to know about those. Also, I asked her some advices before I traveled to Thailand. We both feel happy whenever we can show our cultures to each other. If you travel a lot you can meet various people from various country and that makes you having fun with them sharing common issues. Second, you can get to know about various places. You can have more chances to visit places which the average people would never visit in their lives. For example, one of my friend works at trade company and this year he went to China several times. He told me that China has different atmosphere in every the region and it was good to learn the difference. Especially he enjoyed knowing the different peoples and the historical heritages in each region. I envy him very much because I know I can not have opportunity to get to know the different people in China in my life. The more you travel around, the more places you can explore the world. Finally you can experience different languages. It is essential to know a little bit the language spoken in a certain country when you work in that country, even if you can speak English. One of my friend who works at trade company can speak three different language except English and his mother tongue. He told me that he never tries to learn but naturally acquires the languages as he visited those countries a lot. If you don’t travel around the world you don’t have any chances to speak other language.