INTRODUCTION

The main text must contain at least 6,000 words, from Introduction through Conclusion, excluding abstracts, references, declarations, tables, figure captions, and supplementary materials. Explain the research purpose, motivation, context, and contribution. Keep the introduction accessible while providing sufficient detail for readers to understand the study.

Establish the empirical, theoretical, or methodological problem and explain its significance for economic development research. Clearly identify the research problem, research questions, scope, and objectives.

Integrate the literature review into the Introduction. Critically synthesise relevant studies, establish the research gap, and develop the analytical framework or hypotheses where appropriate. Use relevant and credible primary sources.

RESEARCH METHODS

Describe the research design, data sources, analytical approach, and procedures in sufficient detail to support assessment and reproducibility. Number equations consecutively where applicable.

Where applicable, describe the population, study context, unit of analysis, sampling procedure, sample characteristics, data collection, and measurement of variables or constructs.

Justify the chosen methods and explain the research design, sampling, data collection, and analysis. Report ethical safeguards where relevant and distinguish observed data from simulated data. Explain relevant assumptions and limitations.

RESULTS AND DISCUSSION

Report the findings clearly and in sufficient detail to support the conclusions. Explain the analyses performed and their relevance.

Interpret the findings in relation to the research questions, theoretical framework, and previous studies. Explain why the findings matter, how they address the research gap, and their implications. Avoid merely repeating numerical results.

Tables and Figures

Provide clear, high-quality tables and figures within the relevant sections. Number tables and figures separately and consecutively. Give each a descriptive title and identify its source. Present edited analytical tables rather than unformatted software output.

CONCLUSION

Summarise the answers to the research questions and the study's principal contribution without repeating the abstract. Explain justified theoretical, empirical, and policy implications. Acknowledge limitations and suggest feasible directions for further research.
