

An article on a movie I watched recently

The last movie that I watched was Avatar 2 and it definitely was a rejuvenating piece to watch. The part which I liked about it the most was the depiction of the ocean waters and similar scenes that were there in the movie. In essence the picturisation of waters and oceans was very serene and added an element of calmness to the whole watch. The depiction of family values and the relationship of brotherhood are also a few of the things that adds grace to the whole watch. As would have been imagined by anybody the movie revolves around scenes of war and the fight of trying to capture and protect the other party's territories. The power struggle is portrayed really well and is also something that is experienced in real-life circumstances and situations quite commonly. My favorite scene of all is when the main character's family is able to gradually find peace and solace in a far-off alliance, beautifully showcasing the existence of things like humility, kindness and faith. Also the scene where a younger sibling of the family is able to build trust and alliance with an outcast species despite the fact that others warn him about the consequences was something that again made me cherish the beauty in things like trust, empathy and friendship. It was very rejuvenating for my soul. During each and every second of my watch I felt fully immersed into the movie and didn't feel like, even for a second, that I was actually watching it just for the sake of watching it. Also, as is the case with any movie it is very important to actually establish a connection with the audience and for me Avatar 2 was a success in delivering on those aspects in each and every aspect. The things that I did not appreciate as much in the movie was the complexity with which it was delivered. Yes I agree, that movies do need to be complex at times in order to convey the right message and emotion but as the saying goes "too much of anything is dangerous", I found the same to be the case with Avatar 2. Delving a bit further, the reviews about the movie Avatar 2 definitely stands true and valid in reality too. I really wish to actually go out to watch a sequel of it and think that this movie will again definitely be a great watch. Overall, the movie stands true to what it promises to deliver therefore I will recommend it to you anyday.
