

This month I read Artemis Fowl by Eoin Colfer. Artemis Fowl, a young teenage boy genius that was once a millionaire, wants to become rich again, by using an advanced fairy civilization to his advantage and trying to get their gold. Will he get their gold with his crazy scheme, or will he fall victim to the fairies, or his own plan? I think the theme of Artemis Fowl is, taking a big risk sometimes pays off in big ways. I would give this book a 8/10 because it was fast paced, had lots of magic, and had a lot of planning involved, but there was not enough description and was fairly short. I would recommend this book to people who enjoy fantasy, lots of brains, and futuristic science. Warning: this book contains violence.

- Math of the book pitch: Magic + once millionaire + schemes = Artemis Fowl
- One word pitch: Genius
- Question pitch: would you risk death in order to gain fame and fortune?
